Germans Retreating, Lodz Retaken, Poles Claim; Poilus in Saarbruecken; Allies Form War Council

3 Drives Close On Chief City In Saar, Key to 100-Mile Front

By Taylor Henry.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Sept. 12.—French motorized units were reported tonight driving into the suburbs of the German industrial city of Saarbruecken.

The chief city of the German Saar is regarded as the key to the advance positions of Germany's Siegfried Line on the 100-mile northern flank, between the Moselle and Rhine rivers.

The French drive on Saarbruecken put a wedge into the advance fortifications of the main German Siegfried Line at their strongest point east of this capital of the rich Saar mining basin.

French artillery pounded German lines surrounding the city from heights in the forest of Warndt, region to the southwest captured by the French last week, and the French were reported to have "slightly turned" the defenses of Saarbruecken during the day.

Basel dispatches said reports reaching Switzerland early today indicated one of the greatest artillery duels in history began during the night in the eastern Moselle valley between Germany's Siegfried and France's Maginot lines.

The Moselle Valley has been converted into one of the heaviest fortified regions in the world, with the great Sierck forts on the French side and the strong Trassen area on the other line.

Observers expressed the opinion the British and French staffs were building up an actual assault on the Siegfried Line itself in the near future.

Motor Units Move Up

The French drive was concentrated on Saarbruecken for two apparent reasons:

Capture of the city and bridgehead across the Saar River would force a wide breach in the advance system of blockhouses and machine gun nests covering the Nazi west wall through which the French could drive toward their main objective—the Siegfried Line.

As a result of the collapse of this center key all the German positions in the No-Man's-Land between the Siegfried and Maginot lines would have to be abandoned or risk being crushed by a simultaneous attack from the front and flank.

The city's fall would give the French possession of the rich Saar mining basin, which for its size is one of the most productive coal areas in the world.

French motorized units of tanks and armored cars swept toward Saarbruecken over rough country on either side of the little Roselie River after the whole area had been drenched by heavy French field batteries from the Warndt forest, no more than 5 miles away.

Break Through Anticipated

Presumably the swifter tanks and armored cars were being brought up in anticipation of breaking through the German line.

The French shells pounded at a 2-mile front through the eastern suburbs of the city to the aviation field, which the Germans used as a military port before the fighting began.

The village of St. Arnual, midway between Saarbruecken and the airfield, was caught in the heaviest part of the bombardment.

From the main Siegfriend Line positions behind Saarbruecken the heavy fortress artillery for which the Germans are famous laid down a heavy barrage to cut the advancing French troops.

On this sector of the front the Maginot Line itself was unaffected by the battle as the French advance guard positions have been pushed 10 miles in front of the permanent

Key Bridge Closing Order Rescinded

An order from the Bureau of Public Roads closing Key Bridge at 6 a. m. today for three months was suddenly rescinded last night on instructions from Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways.

Under the original order, the bridge, now under construction at the Virginia end, would have been closed to all passenger vehicles. In revoking the order, Capt. Whitehurst said he had called for a written request "with proper justification" for closing the span.

Pershing, 79 Today, To Issue Statement

General of the Armies Will Break Long Official Silence

By Edward T. Folliard.

Gen. John J. Pershing, fourth man in American history to be called "General of the Armies," is 79 years old today. He will observe the anniversary by breaking a long official silence and issuing an important statement.

The old soldier, who 21 years ago yesterday hurled 550,000 Yanks at the St. Mihiel salient to start the final rout of the Kaiser's army in the first World War, has been reading the war news at Walter Reed Hospital, where he is undergoing a check-up. He also has been poring over a map which was sent to him by the National Geographical Society.

His statement this afternoon was agreed upon after Secretary of War Woodring and Gen. George C. Marshall, Army chief of staff, called on him at Walter Reed a few days ago.

Hatch Act Spares Officers AlreadyElected

But Federal Employes Must Not Run Again, Rogge Tells Towns

The Hatch act, passed at the last session of Congress to prevent political activities by Government employes, does not forbid Federal job-holders' retaining municipal offices in Washington suburban communities, but prevents them from campaigning for re-election after their terms have expired, the Justice Department has advised inquirers, it was learned yesterday.

An official ruling to this effect is expected from the department in a few days.

Widespread alarm had arisen that the legislation would force Federal employes who were town officers in a score of nearby municipalities to vacate their civic jobs.

Town Councils Notified

Assistant Attorney General O. John Rogge has written to L. P. Daniel, mayor of Falls Church, and to town councils of other Maryland and Virginia communities, it was learned, pointing out that persons elected to office before August 2, date of the Hatch act's passage, may occupy the jobs.

The decision is based on the belief, it was understood, that holding an office does not constitute "political management" in the legislation's meaning of "politics." Running for elective office, on the other hand, falls afoul of the law's prohibition against campaigning, the department is convinced.

Executive Exemption Given

Government workers had been permitted to hold offices in a specified list of surrounding communities by an executive order exemption to the civil service rules. The Hatch act contained no such exemption. A drive to amend the law by writing in the desired permission is expected at the next regular session of Congress.

Rogge also has written to Wilbur

Reich Seizes Tires; Revokes Gas Permits

Automobiles Can Be Driven Only When On State's Business

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 12.—Adopting a stringent economy measure, Germany tonight announced the confiscation by the state of every privately owned rubber tire in the Reich.

The confiscation order, issued by the federal bureau for rubber and asbestos with the approval of the minister of economics, was in conjunction with a decree which virtually prohibits the use of automobiles after September 20.

Collection stations are being established, to which citizens will be obliged to bring new, partly used and worn-out tires.

Owners to Be Paid

Tires in dealers' stocks and reserve tires owned by individuals but not actually on cars or spare wheels must be delivered to the collection agencies at once.

Tires now in use may be held by the owner, who is required, however, to keep them in good condition until he is notified to deliver them to the state.

The announcement said owners would be paid on the basis of appraisals which fall into five degrees of value, depending on the mileage of the tires.

Urgent War Necessity

The decree regarding automobiles, published yesterday, virtually abolished the private use of automobiles by revoking permits to buy gasoline unless the drvier is able to prove the use of his car is in the state's interest. The confiscation of tires indicated not only gasoline but rubber was regarded as an urgent war necessity.

The German official gazette today published facsimiles of new food rationing cards which will take effect late this month. Cigar smokers were limited in their purchases to five at a time.

There will be special bread, meat, and fat cards for children up to 6 years and between 6 and 14.

Readers Commend The Post For Adding N. Y. Times Service

A cross-section of newspaper readers, engaged in various occupations, unanimously agreed yesterday The Post performed another public service when it contracted for the New York Times War News Service.

HUMMER

MISS SNYDER

Quizzed at their respective jobs on what they think of the newly-added dispatches from the capitals and battlegrounds of war-ravished Europe, this is what they said:

George W. Hummer, Premier cab driver—"It's a great addition. I am keeping a scrap book on war news and, believe me, the New York Times War Service stories are indispensable. I have always been a reader of The Post's news, editorials and sports and this feature makes it more useful than ever. I was just too young to get into the World War but I kept a scrap book on it. It will be interesting, comparing stories on the two wars."

Roosevelt Bars Any Changes Of Sovereignty In Americas

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt yesterday reminded the world, in an indirect way, that the American hemisphere is closed to changes in the sovereignty of any portion of it as a result of Europe's war.

In an extemporaneous discussion of historic application of the Monroe Doctrine, the President said that British, Dutch and French possessions in South America may not be taken over by any other power.

At the same time there was brought nearer the anticipated finish fight over repeal of this country's arms embargo to warring countries. As Mr. Roosevelt said he would issue "soon" his call for a special session of Congress to act on his repeal proposal, Senators Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Nye, of North Dakota, Republicans, joined Senator Borah, Idaho Republican, in declaring bitter opposition to such a revision of the neutrality act.

Hull Studies Neutral Rights

A pressing problem for this country, relating to the stopping of American ships by belligerent war vessels, was engaging the serious attention of Secretary of State Hull, meanwhile, with indications there would soon be a statement of this country's stand on its rights as a neutral.

In another war-related development, Mr. Roosevelt said he was studying the movements of commodity prices, with particular reference to copper.

Mr. Roosevelt discussed the Monroe Doctrine with reporters in reference to British interpretations of his Kingston, Ont., speech of last year, when he said, "The United States will not stand idly by : domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire (than Great Britain)."

Reviews Doctrine

A communique by the British Ministry of Information contended the declaration placed Canada "in a special position."

The President said that there was much comment in Europe at the time when portions of South America had won their independence from foreign powers and had set up republics. There was a good deal of talk in Europe about forming a combination to re-establish European sovereignty over the new republics. Much was written about it at the time, Mr. Roosevelt continued, and that was the origin of the Monroe Doctrine.

It included the definite thought, he continued, that there should be no change in the sovereignty of those portions of America that had not revolted, largely islands—Cuba, Puerto Rico and others—but including also Dutch, English and British Guiana and British Honduras.

Applies to Bahamas

As time went on, the President said, the foreign sovereignty of these portions of America has become generally recognized because there was no trouble over it. In the ensuing 120 years those countries have never bothered any American nation, but it might present a different effect on American nations if there were any changes in the sovereignty.

Pointing out that such a view would apply to Canada, as well as the South American or Central American territories, the President said his Kingston speech was not a new statement, but a restatement, and that it would also apply equally well to the British Bahamas and other foreign holdings in this hemisphere such as French-owned Martinique, Guadeloupe, St. Pierre and Miquelon.

The President denied reports that a joint American-Canadian patrol was being maintained in North Atlantic waters. He said American ships were on patrol because, as he put it, we want to know what's going on in all American waters.

While Senators Vandenberg and Nye were voicing hostility to repeal of the arms embargo, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, declared in a statement that the present restriction amounts to "taking sides with Hitler." He supported the President's proposal, saying:

"I believe that we should continue to do business as we have throughout history and sell to Germany, Great Britain, or any other government the products of our farms

Chamberlain, Daladier Give New Pledge to Rescue Poland

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Copyright by New York Times.

London, Sept. 12.—History rolled back 21 years today when Prime Minister Chamberlain flew to France for an unheralded but momentous meeting of the Supreme Council of the Western Allies.

It was not so much a new departure as a continuation of those famous sessions at Versailles in 1917 and 1918 when the leaders of the World War Allies met periodically to shape the defeat of Germany.

Now, as then, there were British troops on the soil of France—not in such huge numbers as in 1918, but again under the supreme command of a French soldier for the duration of the war.

Today, in fact, the British and French were just picking up the threads of their old co-operation, although new men and new problems were involved.

Chamberlain returned tonight in a Royal Air Force plane after his first wartime journey from England and his first flight abroad since his fateful trip to Munich last September.

Tomorrow he will be in his place in the House of Commons ready to report on the course of the war.

The purpose of the meeting was to make possible a direct personal exchange of views on the present situation and on measures to be taken in the immediate future.

To Meet Frequently

The meeting fully confirmed the firm resolve of Great Britain and France to devote their entire strength and resources to the waging of the conflict which has been forced upon them and to give all possible assistance to their Polish ally, who is resisting with so much gallantry the ruthless invasion of her country.

The plight of Poland was not, of course, the only reason why the supreme council met today. It was emphasized tonight that meetings would be held at frequent intervals so that Anglo-French policy as well as strategy and tactics would be unified throughout the war.

If such a lesson had been learned early in the last war, military experts agree, the history of those years might have been different.

The movement of large expeditionary forces to France in the first week of the war was one of Britain's most closely guarded secrets. Not only was news of the troop movement banned from publication here and abroad, but there were few in the British Isles who knew an army was being rushed to help the French in an assault on the German west wall.

All Transported Safely

From all parts of the United Kingdom, infantry, artillery and heavy mechanized units made their way to ports in trains and under their own power in such small detachments that little attention was attracted. Ships were quickly loaded to sail under cover of night to rendezvous where convoys awaited.

The utmost secrecy was necessary, it was pointed out here, to prevent useless loss of life. Had it been known in Germany that a large-scale troop movement was under way, it would have subjected ships and embarkation points to the danger of bombing. That every ship left on schedule and arrived safely is a tribute to efficiency of the military command and to effectiveness of the censorship.

From Scotland and from the west and east of England trains followed each other into docks day and night and, at one period, it was said, there was an average of three trains an hour arriving at embarkation point. Travelers recently arrived described the departure of the troops, but until the movement to France was completed and the official announcement was made that a British army was now at the front it was impossible to disclose details.

No Assault on West Wall

London (Wednesday), Sept. 13.—No secret is being made here of the fact that the tentative strategy which the British are urging on the French includes at least four points.

These points are:

All decisions made to be based on the supposition that the war

The War Today

FRENCH TROOPS were reported to have entered the suburbs of Saarbruecken at the center of the northern half of the Western Front; French guns were shelling the city as infantry and merchanized columns moved against it from two sides; the "heaviest artillery duel in history" was reported on the northern extremity of the line; the southern half of the front, where the Rhine forms the border, still was quiet.

POLAND CLAIMED Germany had been forced to withdraw nine divisions from the battles west of Warsaw and claimed recapture of Lodz; Germans took Posen in the west, however, narrowing the loop holding several Polish divisions, and forced their way southeast of Warsaw and east across southern Poland.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT reminded the world of the Monroe Dictrine, emphasizing a warning that it covers British, Dutch and French possessions as well as independent states.

BRITISH AND FRENCH premiers, with Gen. Gamelin and Lord Chatfield, met "somewhere in France" to revive the Supreme Allied War Council and pledged both nations to press the fight on Hitlerism.

Stocks Tumble But Regain Before Close

Many Up $1 to $4; Commodity Markets Fluctuate Erratically

By Claude A. Jagger.
Associated Press Financial Editor.

New York, Sept. 12.—Flurries of selling swept through the Nation's principal securities and commodities markets today, but the "war buying" urge abated only momentarily.

In the earlier trading, the stock market experienced its sharpest setback since the bouncing "war babies" led the bulls out of their long retirement 11 days ago

But after recent trading favorites had tumbled $1 to $6 a share, bullish professionals again took hold in a manner reminiscent of 1929, and rotating buying through various groups, quickly turned the list upward. By the close, most of the losses had been regained, and many were $1 to more than $4 above yesterday final levels, some at new highs for more than a year.

In the meantime, commodity markets fluctuated erratically. Such "anti-profiteering" measures as the Federal Government's lifting of marketing quotas on sugar, and the fixing of maximum prices for metals and other staples in England, gave speculators pause.

Wheat Futures Drop

Raw sugar futures dropped the limit permitted in a day—¼ of a cent a pound—and selling waves appeared in rubber, coffee and tin. The Rubber Manufacturers Association appealed to the international rubber regulation committee for an increase in the export quota, and the international tin committee increased the permissible shipments of that staple.

Wheat futures at Chicago dipped almost 3 cents a bushel, but came came back and finished with net losses of only 1⅜ to 2⅛ cents. Meanwhile, silk, hides and wool pushed up strongly in the New York exchanges. Several raw silk deliveries advanced the full 15 cents a pound permitted in one day, raw hides rose about 1-3 to ½ cent a

Duke and Wallis, Exile Over, Are 'Somewhere in England'

By Frank R. Kelley.
Copyright, 1939, by N. Y. Herald-Tribune.

London, Sept. 12.—The Duke of Windsor, accompanied by his American-born duchess, the former Wallis Warfield Simpson for whom he abdicated the British throne on December 10, 1936, ended his exile yesterday. The couple set foot once again on English soil without ceremony and with official British censorship banning all mention of his arrival until tonight, 24 hours later.

So well was the secret kept that millions of his former subjects were not aware that he had come back until a British Broadcasting Corporation announcer stated the fact simply in a news broadcast tonight.

Unheralded, the Windsors came ashore in blustery weather after crossing the channel from an unidentified French port.

Tanned, fit and ready to help his country in any possible way now that it is at war, just as he was prepared to offer his services during his long absence in peace time, the Duke smilingly greeted friends who met him at the dock.

Quietly, the Duke and Duchess entered an automobile in which they were driven away to an undisclosed destination.

Efforts to learn the whereabouts of the Duke and Duchess and their immediate plans were fruitless. After permitting the bare fact of their arrival to slip out, the author-

Reich Diverts 9 Divisions to Western Front, Warsaw Says

By Lloyd Lehrbas,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Budapest (Wednesday), Sept. 13.—An official Warsaw radio broadcast said early today nine German divisions had been diverted from the four-day Warsaw siege to the western European and Vistula fronts and that the Nazi invaders now are definitely "on the run."

Warsaw began the fifth day of siege with the announcer's statement that the invaders had been stopped and hurled back.

The official announcements said German pressure on the city probably had been decreased because of the withdrawal of the divisions, and that the Germans had been driven back about 6 miles.

Claim Recapture of Lodz

Poles, meanwhile, claimed the recapture of Lodz, an industrial center 75 miles southwest of Warsaw. Its capture by the Germans was announced two days ago.

A Polish army of 250,000 men retreating from Pomorze and Posen was said to have established a contact with Polish troops around Warsaw.

The dry autumn weather which hitherto has helped the advance of the Germans has now changed it is reported. Rain has fallen and the roads, already ruined by the advance of German tanks and by air bombing, will, it is asserted, become more and more impassable.

Martial music blared from the Warsaw station last night to tell Europe the dogged defenders of Poland's capital clung to their heavily shelled positions.

Meantime, meagre reports from announcers and Polish army headquarters at Lwow (Lemberg) indicated Warsaw's defenders are holding grimly to the gains they reported in pushing German advance troops back from the city's suburbs.

Reinforcements Rushed

Reinforcements determined not to lose their beloved capital are rushing to the defense through a narrowing lane from the southeast.

The Warsaw radio at 9 p. m. yesterday (3 p. m. E. S. T.) in a review of the day's fighting, said the capital was quieter than yesterday. Shelling of the city continued but there were no serious fires.

Reinforcements, an announcement from the station at Lwow said, were being rushed into the city. The Warsaw announcer said earlier the defenders, aided by citizen soldiers, were in fighting positions along the east bank of the Vistula River, which runs through the capital.

The Polish army headquarters declared the nearest German troops were 6 miles from the center of Warsaw.

Severe fighting was reported around Modlin, where the Bug and Narew rivers join the Vistula. That is nearly 20 miles north of Warsaw. There, it was said, the attack was suported by intensive artillery fire and many tanks.

Germans Held Up, Poles Claim

The German southwestern armies, striking toward Warsaw from the direction of Lodz, still were 25 miles from the city, radio reports said.

The Poles claimed to be holding back superior numbers of Germans, in the northeast at Lomza in the plains between the Narew and the Bug Rivers, and far to the south at Przemysl, 58 miles west of Lwow (Lemberg) and about 50 miles from the Slovakian and Hungarian frontiers.

Mayor Josef Starzynski of Warsaw appealed by radio to the youth of the besieged city to enlist in what may become a "suicide battalion" to halt the German armies trying to smash their way into Warsaw behind tanks.

A broadcast from Vilna said that boys as young as 15 were joining

One of the most significant of the war gags now current in the Capital among the anti-FDR, anti-PWA crowd goes something like this:

"What do you mean? I thought you were opposed to all Gov't spending!"

Dies Unit Seeks Man Who Got Reds' $15,000

Reveals Communists In Last Few Years Have Handled $10,164,730

By John B. Oakes

Does anybody here know Larry Taylor?

Diverted from the serious business of learning how Communists undermine the Republic, the Dies Committee yesterday conducted an intensive search from here to there in an eort to identify Larry, the Mystery Man.

Evidence was presented before the committee that Larry Taylor had indorsed Communist Party checks totaling $15,000. But William Weiner, financial secretary of the party, previously had said the only Larry he knew was an office boy at Communist headquarters.

William E. Browder, brother of Earl, the party's general secretary, said the same thing. Neither Weiner nor Browder, who until four months ago was New York State treasurer for the party, knew Larry's last name.

Committee Mystified

Mystification spread through the committee, only partially alleviated by Browder's "hypothesis" that the Larry Taylor who received the $15,000 really was Larry, the office boy, and had been sent out at various times to cash checks when funds were low at party headquarters.

Chairman Dies indicated Weiner would be called upon to shed further light upon Taylor and the $15,000.

In addition to worrying about Larry, the committee and spectators sat through six hours of testimony yesterday dealing with the financial processes of the national party and its New York State district.

Indicating that the Communist Party itself approaches the status of big business at least in the volume of its financial transactions, Carl Marwig, committee accountant, said an examination of 43 bank accounts of the party, it affiliates and its subsidiaries revealed total deposits of $10,164,730.91 in the last few years.

Accounts in Browder's Name

Marwig asserted that the total of all bank deposits made by William Browder from April, 1937, to March, 1939—approximately his tenure as State treasurer—was 1,302,177.13, with disbursements of $1,296,997.80.

Although the accounts were in his own name, Browder testified none of the funds was his. He said one of the two banks he used, the Manufacturers Trust Co. of New York, refused to accept an account in the name of the Communist Party and "insisted" that it be carried in Browder's name.

Browder's deposits in that account alone for the 2-year period totaled $1,011,821.73, said Marwig, while his deposits in the Amalgamated Bank, also of New York, amounted to $284,753.32. The balance, he testified, was in a small savings account.

Asked if he had reported these large sums in his income tax returns, Browder said counsel had advised him it would not be necessary, as "everybody knew the accounts had none of my money."

Weiner also said he deposited money of the national party organization under his own name. He said that in one of the accounts in the Chase National Bank in New York, he kept his own funds as well as the party's.

Yearly Budget $200,000

Weiner, whose rather reticent, nervous manner contrasted sharply with the polished suavity of Browder, told the committee the national party's income in 1938 was $191,722.71, and for the first six months of 1939, $113,146.08. He said the annual budget approximated $200,000.

Twelve or 15 sympathizers have contributed $1,000 each to the party, said Weiner, but he refused to divulge their names to the committee on the grounds that "it might hurt them." Weiner flatly denied previous allegations that the party received money "from sources outside the United States.

The financial secretary said that up to 1937 most of the Communist Party's transactions were in cash, but that since then banks largely have been used.

In a discussion of Communist publications, Weiner told the committee that the weekly New Masses owes the party $6,500.

Maj. Brown Robbed By Pickpocket—But All in Fun

Maj. Ernest W. Brown and Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, highest police officials, had their pockets picked yesterday afternoon in view of a score of persons at headquarters.

The culprit was caught, and surrendered the property. The loot included watches and wallets, a vest and a pair of suspenders.

No arrests were made because the "thefts" were in fun. Giovanni, a sleight-of-hand artist, was demonstrating the ease with which a pickpocket works. He took Maj. Brown's wrist watch, wallet and some change, hardly touching the police superintendent. The vest and suspenders' were taken from a reporter and policeman, respectively.

Edison Puts All Shipbuilding Operations Under Admiral Robinson to Speed Up Navy

Admiral Robinson Rear Adm. DuBose Rear Adm. Church Capt. Fisher, jr. Capt. Van Keuren

Acting Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison last night placed all naval ship construction activities under one head and ordered a reshuffling of the shipbuilding high command.

He ordered a former engineer in chief of the Navy, Rear Admiral Samuel M. Robinson, back to Washington to assume a supervision over the Bureaus of Engineering and Construction and Repair and detailed him to take over the actual performance of many of his own duties as co-ordinator of naval shipbuilding.

Announcement of the new set-up followed a series of steps taken to make the Navy ready for any emergency, including the ordering of reserve destroyers into active commission and a 25 per cent expansion in personnel. Last night's action was taken in naval circles as a move to assure the rapid completion of the present huge shipbuilding program.

The changes in key shipbuilding posts are:

Admiral Robinson, now supervisor of naval machinery for the Schenectady, N. Y., district, will be appointed chief of the Bureau of Engineering, effective today, with additional orders as assistant to Edison, as shipbuilding co-ordinator. The engineering post has been vacant since May, when the four-year tour of Rear Admiral Harold G. Bowen expired.

Capt. Alexander H. Van Keuren, industrial manager of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, next week will become chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair with rank of rear admiral.

He relieves Rear Admiral William G. DuBose, whose four-year term had nearly two more years to run. Admiral DuBose on November 1 becomes director of the experimental model basin at Carderock, Md., now nearing completion.

Capt. Lewis B. McBride, now assigned as basin director, will continue in charge of the old model plant at the Washington Navy Yard and as a member of the Navy Compensation Board.

Capt. Charles W. Fisher, jr., Construction Corps, was named director of the shore establishments division, Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He relieves Rear Admiral A. T. Church, who will become director of the Naval engineering experimental station at Annapolis, a post now vacant. Capt. Allan J. Chantry will relieve Capt. Van Keuren at Philadelphia.

Yesterday's move was regarded in some naval circles as the first step toward consolidations of all shipbuilding agencies into one bureau. For decades Naval ship construction has been under various divisional heads in the Navy Department, with the Bureau of Construction and Repair building the hulls, the Bureau of Engineering, engines, and the Bureau of Ordnance, armor and guns. Consolidation has been recommended from time to time. Edison said the move was not a merger of bureaus, as such a step would take either Congressional action or Presidential action under the reorganization act. He added, however, that full consolidation is being studied and "may lead from this action."

Edison said Admiral Robinson "will be, in effect, over the two bureaus of Engineering and Construction and Repair," but will have no authority over the Bureau of Ordnance except as his assistant as shipbuilding co-ordinator. He described the personnel changes as "putting the right men in the right places, thereby better fitting the Navy for readiness for war."

Admiral Robinson, 57, was born in Eulogy, Tex., but now lives at Berkeley, Calif. He entered the Naval Academy in 1899 and has had wide service. He served in the Bureau of Engineering during the World War and several times since, being chief from 1931 to 1935.

Capt. Van Keuren, a native of Michigan, entered the Naval Academy with Admiral Robinson, but is a year older. Transferring to the Construction Corps early in his career, he holds a special commendatory letter for designing protective devices for merchant vessels during the World War. He was an adviser to the 1930 London Naval Conference and a member of the Government technical committee on safety at sea during 1935-37.

The Gallup Poll

McNutt Gains Support, but Garner Still Leads Democratic Candidates With 45%

By Dr. George Gallup.

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 12.—A Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion shows these major developments in the 1940 Democratic Presidential picture in the last month:

Since approximately two Democrats in every three favor a third term for President Roosevelt, the President himself must be considered a leading choice of the Democratic rank-and-file for 1940.

GEORGE GALLUP

If President Roosevelt is not a candidate for the Presidency, however, Vice President Garner is still the popular choice of the party membership to succeed him. In spite of a slight dip in Garner's strength since early summer, there has apparently been no appreciable change in the Texan's popularity following the attack on him by C. I. O. President John L. Lewis.

On the other hand, the survey shows that Paul V. McNutt has continued to gain esteem with the party's rank-and-file in the weeks since President Roosevelt boosted him to the post of Federal Security Administrator—in charge of the whole social security program—in the enlarged Cabinet.

To see how Democrats would divide if Roosevelt were out of the picture, the Institute asked a cross-section of Democratic voters in every one of the 48 States:

"If President Roosevelt is not a candidate, whom would you like to see elected?"

McNutt, a former head of the American Legion and more recently United States commissioner in the Philippines, received 21 per cent of all Democratic Presidential mentions as compared with 13 per cent last month and only 3 per cent in June.

The following figures, which give the standings in last month's survey as well as today's, show Postmaster General Jim Farley and Secretary of State Cordell Hull still among the top-running leaders:

TODAY'S SURVEY

1. Vice Pres. Garner	45%
2. Paul V. McNutt	21
3. James A. Farley	10
4. Cordell Hull	10
5. Frank Murphy	2
6. Bennett Clark	1
7. Harry L. Hopkins	1
8. Alben W. Barkley	1
9. Lloyd C. Stark	1

LAST MONTH

1. Vice President Garner	46%
2. Paul V. McNutt	13
3. Cordell Hull	12
4. James A. Farley	12
5. Harry L. Hopkins	3
6. Frank Murphy	3
7. Alben W. Barkley	1
8. Bennett Clark	1
9. Henry A. Wallace	1
All others	8

Many observers think that the outbreak of war has increased F. D. R's chances of being nominated by his party, and are waiting for new manifestations of public opinion on the whole question of a third term.

While the institute has consistently found only about one voter in three in favor of a third term for the President, and only about four in ten who say they would vote for him if he runs, new tests will be completed shortly to measure the effect, if any, of the changed world situation.

Other Democrats widely mentioned in the survey in case Mr. Roosevelt does not run are:

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana; Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, Senator Harry Byrd, of Virginia; Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, Federal Loans Administrator Jesse Jones, Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Senator Millard Tydings, of Maryland.

Insurance Officials Tell Of Subsidiary

Firm Set Up to Handle Irregularities of Agent, Monopoly Group Hears

By The Associated Press

Executives of the Travelers Insurance Co. testified yesterday they set up a subsidiary company in the Midwest—the Nebraska Securities Corporation—to handle nearly $1,500,000 of irregularities of a mortgage agent without disclosing this in financial statements of the insurance company.

The officials told the national monopoly sub-committee that the Nebraska subsidiary also was utilized to take over real estate and mortgages of doubtful value; to maintain the value of Travelers' stocks by purchases during the depression; and to help steady the condition of the Connecticut Savings Bank owned by the insurance company.

L. Edmond Zacher, president of Travelers, admitted that the eventual loss to the insurance company on the Nebraska subsidiary amounted to more than $2,300,000 in addition to some $1,300,000 of interest the Nebraska subsidiary failed to pay to the parent corporation.

At the same time Zacher and other Travelers executives disputed questions by counsel and committee members as to ethics of the financial transactions.

"Wasn't this a legal evasion of the intent of Connecticut laws?" asked J. J. O'Connell, committee member, referring to transactions by the Nebraska corporation in Travelers stocks at direction of Travelers officials. The Connecticut law prohibits an insurance company dealing in its own stocks, O'Connell said.

"No, sir; I think not," Zacher replied. "I'm not a lawyer but this was approved by counsel and that was good enough for me."

Gladden W. Baker, treasurer of Travelers, and W. S. Sherwood, cashier, denied flatly that there were any attempts to evade legal purposes. The Nebraska corporation was established in 1926 and finally liquidated in 1936.

Hatch Act Spares Those in Office

S. Finch, District suffrage movement leader, explaining that the legislation does not forbid Federal employes from taking active part in the District Suffrage Association and the Citizens' Conference on District Suffrage. In a letter to William E. Warne, of Alexandria, Va., Rogge ruled that membership and office holding in a citizens' association were not banned.

Some Issues Remain

Hatch act interpretations still to be decided by the Justice Department concern the problem of whether employes of the District government are covered by the law, whether recipients of relief may campaign for elective office and whether the ban on political activity also applies to persons occasionally retained by the Government and employes of Government corporations.

Any decision on the last category was seen as particularly significant by observers who have noted the insistence of the Maritime Commission and Inland Waterways Corporation that employes on Government-owned vessels are Federal workers.

Under this interpretation, the seamen are forbidden to strike. Should the Justice Department decide they are not Federal workers in the sense of the Hatch act, it might thereby set an entirely different precedent.

Rulings on these issues are expected to be handed down soon in an official bulletin.

B. F. Adams Made Fire Department Board Member

Benjamin F. Adams, assistant District assessor, yesterday was named a member of the Fire Department Trial Board by the Commissioners.

In order to make the appointment, the Commissioners amended rules governing activities of the Fire Department which specify makeup of the Trial Board. Heretofore an Assistant Engineer Commissioner has served with an assistant corporation counsel and a ranking member of the Fire Department on the board. In this instance, Adams replaces Capt. C. L. Adcock, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, on the trial body. Capt. John L. Person, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, was named alternate for Adams on the board.

Madden Denies Declaring Employers Are Mostly 'Wrong'

By the Associated Press

Chairman J. Warren Madden, of the Labor Board, denied in a formal statement yesterday that he told a group of Remington-Rand, Inc., employes that the employer "is most always wrong."

Madden said such a statement attributed to him by Remington-Rand workers was "purely imaginary."

"The action of the board," he said, "and its agents in some thousands of cases in finding that the employer was not wrong is the best evidence."

Madden's statement followed submission to the Senate Labor committee of what was purported to be a stenographic report of Madden's remarks to a group of independently organized Remington-Rand employes who opposed their replacement with A. F. L. strikers ordered reinstated by the board.

This report, forwarded by Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, said Madden was asked whether, if it had the decision to make over again, the board would "issue an order to have men put out of their jobs if you knew it was liable to cause bloodshed."

"Yes, we would," Madden was quoted then as replying. "Strikers must be protected against the employer, who is most always wrong. Therefore, we cannot allow workers to lose a strike even though it does cause bloodshed," the report said.

Madden said in his statement yesterday that the delegates told the board officials there would be "violent resistance" if workers who had been engaged to take the places of striking unionists were dismissed.

"They asked the question," Madden said, "whether the board would persist in carrying out its order in the face of such a threat of violent resistance to the law and the order of the court.

"I advised them that the board would so persist. I should suppose that any agent of any government would make the same answer."

J. L. Laskey Appointed

General Counsel Edmond M. Toland, of the House committee to investigate the National Labor Relations Board, announced yesterday appointment, as "one of the principal attorneys of his staff," of John L. Lasky, Washington attorney, son of former U. S. District Attorney John E. Lasky.

Nazis Say Aim Is to Render Poles Harmless

Plan Is to Eliminate Necessity of Having to Fight on Two Fronts

By Melvin K. Whiteleather,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Sept. 12.—Germany, authoritative sources said tonight, intends to fight across Poland all the way to the Russian border, if this should be necessary, to render the entire Polish army harmless.

Entrance of France and Britain into the war has changed the picture, it was said, so that the high command wants to eliminate completely the possibility of having to fight for long on two fronts at the same time.

Hence the present plan is to fight until all Poland is occupied and the Polish military so scattered that it would be impossible for it to reassemble and make trouble.

Fuehrer Hitler originally announced his intention of fighting until the present Polish government should fall or a new one be formed that would accept his peace terms.

Nazis Still Moving Up

Nothing was said about the amount of territory desired or about the necessity of disabling the whole Polish army.

I returned to Berlin tonight from the Lodz and Radom fronts in Poland, west and south of Warsaw, respectively. No concern over the Western Front was discernible among Germans there. The only purpose seemed to be a determination to clean out the Poles.

The troops still were moving up to participate in the first phase of hard fighting which the war has produced.

The Poles have accepted battle on three fronts—north of Lodz, east of Radom and just northeast of the capital itself.

The Germans said they were confident their superior equipment would wear down the thickly-massed Polish forces.

Country Thinly Occupied

The Germans have left the countryside relatively thinly occupied with troops. Soldiers have been kept moving close to the fast-advancing fronts.

Thousands of "auxiliary troops" have been rushed into the conquered territory nearest the German border to assist in rebuilding bridges and filling in the ruts on dirt roads.

They commandeered thousands of wagons and teams. They wear dust-colored washable uniforms. Among them are 18-year-old youths of the labor service. These auxiliary troops form the only visible signs of occupation in some areas.

No rain of any importance has fallen in western Poland since the invasion began September 1.

Bad roads have been so pounded by heavy trucks that the dust is so thick in some spots auxiliary troops have been kept busy watering roads. Otherwise it would be impossible for drivers to see the next truck ahead.

All Railroads Useless

Despite the bad roads—which the Poles calculated would be a good defense weapon against motorized German divisions—no broken down German vehicles were observed along the highway.

Germany's army moved along as though on concrete highways like those in Germany. I saw but two German armored cars out of commission, evidently rendered so by hand grenades.

I passed two Polish cars battered to pieces. Alongside each was a mound of fresh dirt with a cross and a helmet hung over the cross.

Motors carried the entire German army into the campaign. Railways were useless as the Poles dynamited all bridges and railway switches when retreating. I saw only one rail line in operation and that was just inside Poland in Silesia.

The German army, which was organized to the minutest detail, apparently clicked without a hitch.

German Morale High

The troops appeared to be enthusiastic and to have a high morale.

A two-day tour about with the German army disclosed that the Poles had been fighting harder than this writer had supposed from reading the German army communiques.

Every inch of the Polish retreat has been contested. But each time the Poles assembled and tried to make a stand they found themselves surrounded.

Fighting had occurred in almost every village through which I passed, and the communities today are largely in ruins, having been either bombed or burned or both.

The destruction which I saw, and it was typical of all western Poland, resembled northern France after the World War. Few walls stood, and these showed the gouges of machine-gun bullets.

I estimated that more than half the population of western Poland left its homes before the German army arrived.

Capital Jews to Welcome Rosh Hashanah, New Year 5700, With Rites at Sundown

Max Goldberg, reader of the Ohev Sholm Congregation, Fifth and I streets northwest, blows the shofar—ram's horn—which will summon worshipers to observe Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year at sundown today. On the wall hangs the Torah, Ten Commandments

Adherents of the Jewish faith will kneel today at sundown in the hushed atmosphere of houses of worship, where they will welcome Rosh Hashanah, their new year 5700, with Maariv rites of prayer and meditation.

They will return to synagogue and temple tomorrow morning, when the traditional blasts of the shofar—ram's horn—will remind them of the need for reflection and repentance, and their spiritual leaders will bring inspirational messages on issues vital in the life of world Jewry.

Of the two days' duration among orthodox and conservative Jews, and one day in reformed congregations, the services will be divided into the three parts of Malcroth, Zichronoth and Shofroth, with 30 blasts heard at the end of each section and 10 final blows. This ceremony will take place Thursday and Friday mornings.

Three Tunes Blown

The shofar is blown either by the reader or cantor of the congregation, who intersperses three tunes—the Tkeeah, Schvorim and Truah—between the rabbi's reading of Old Testament passages. Each tune carries a special significance, the Tkeeah meaning allegiance to the prophets; the Schvorim a prayer for other prophets, and the Truah a direct appeal to God.

Special skill is required in blowing the shofar, which is of genuine ram's horn material. Most of the world's supply of the instruments comes from Tel Aviv, the Holy Land, and are manufactured under the supervision of rabbis. The firm of Jacob Russman is one of the best known makers.

Only during Rosh Hashanah rites does the cantor wear his white gown and cap. Black is customary on other occasions, especially during Yom Kippur—Day of Atonement—most sacred day in the Jewish calendar, which falls this year on September 23. The sacred Kol Nidre chant, whose origin is buried in the past, will highlight that observance.

Orthodox Rites Scheduled

Leading orthodox rites are scheduled for Beth Sholom, Southeast Hebrew Congregation, Adas Isreal, Tifereth Israel, B'Nai Israel, Ohev Sholom and other synagogues, while principal reformed services will be held at the Washington Hebrew Congregation, where Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, successor to the late Rabbi Simon, will speak tonight at 8 o'clock on "Not Peace, But a Sword." His Thursday theme will be, "The Next Generation Is Ours."

Cantor Yesrolikel Flosberg, who has officiated before some of the largest congregations in the United States, will be guest cantor at Ohev Sholom. He will be assisted by a male choir from New York, directed by Henry Spector.

At Tifereth Israel Synagogue, Fourteenth and Euclid streets northwest, Rabbi Harry Silverstone will speak tomorrow at 10:15 a. m., on "Our Relation to the Past," and on Friday morning on "Our Relation to the Future." He will be assisted by Cantor Charles Intrater.

Rabbi Metz to Speak

"Israel Among the Nations" and "In the Tents of Jewry" will be discussed tomorrow and Friday, respectively, by Rabbi Solomon H. Metz at Adas Israel Synagogue. Cantor Louis Novick will assist.

Cantor Kirschner and his choir from New York will participate in the services at Beth Sholom Talmud Torah Congregation, where Rabbi H. M. Levinson is to preach on "Has Humanity Outgrown Religion," tomorrow, and "Righteousness," Friday.

Southeast Hebrew Congregation worshipers will hear Rabbi Julius Loeb deliver addresses on "Truth, Justice and Peace," "The Call to Duty," and "Looking Forward." Rabbi Henry Segal's themes at B'Nai Israel will be "Caught in the Thicket" and "Do We Really Want to Work Together?"

London Censor Cuts War News, Slows Papers

System Fails to Work As Planned, Delaying Facts and Dispatches

By the Associated Press

London, Sept 12 (Passed Through British Censorship). — Censorship, imposed to guard military secrets, has cut the flow of war news to a trickle for the English and slowed transmission to the press and radio of other countries.

The difficulties—delay and limited information—continuing into the second week of the war, are attributed in part by officials to the problem of organization involved in setting up censorship and to the short time for preparation.

One difficulty appears to be that plans made in advance have not worked out in practice.

Lack of Agreement Blamed

This is attributed chiefly to lack of agreement between ministry officials and military authorities.

(The following section was delayed eight and a half hours by the British censorship):

Under the front page heading "Why the Morning Papers Were Late" the London Star recounted in detail the censorship muddle over news of British troops in France.

Here is the Star's story:

Many London morning newspapers were delivered late or not at all today owing to the action of the censorship.

Late last night (11:15 p. m., 5:15 p. m., Eastern standard time) authority was given by the ministry of information to an announcement that British troops were fighting side by side with the French.

At 11:33 p. m., the ministry withdrew their authority.

Some newspapers had received the censor's sanction to print the facts at an earlier hour and the story was already in the early editions, being given great prominence on the front page at 1:45 a. m. Tuesday.

Finally Released Again

Meanwhile other editions of the newspaper were being prepared without the banned stories.

Then at 2:25 a. m. came a final announcement from the ministry of information authorizing the release of the news after all, the Star related.

Today the ministry of information issued a communique saying British troops were in France, but had not yet been in action. It did not explain this contradiction with the earlier story.

Japan Speedily Reorganizes Force in China

Cuts Communciations Between Manchukuo And Outer Mongolia

By the United Press.

Tokyo, Wednesday, Sept. 13.—The general staff of the army today completed a hurried reorganization of Japan's armed forces in China and simultaneously cut off communications with the frontier between Japan's Manchukuoan dependency and Soviet Russia's Outer Mongolian protectorate.

Gen. Toshizo Nishio, former superintendent general of military education, was named "commander-in-chief of Japanese expeditionary forces in China," with Lieut. Gen. Seishiro Itagaki, former war minister, as his chief of staff.

A communique of the army section of imperial headquarters also announced creation of a "general headquarters for Japanese expeditionary forces in China" designed to bring about an early settlement of the undeclared war with China "in keeping with the present situation."

Gen. Sugiyama, former supreme commander of the expeditionary forces in North China, was relegated to the supreme war council—a post which virtually removes him from active service.

Lieut. Gen. Yoshijiro Umezu was appointed commander of the Kwantung army (the Japanese army in Manchukuo and the Kwantung leased territory) and concurrently ambassador to Manchukuo, succeeding Gen. Kenkichi Uyeda who was assigned to the general staff.

President Hints Curb if Copper Goes Too High

President Roosevelt indicated yesterday action would be taken to curb copper prices if they rose very much above the present level.

The President said copper prices were being watched, when asked whether new measures to check price rises were contemplated.

Mr. Roosevelt previously had suspended, by an emergency proclamation, sugar import and marketing quotas, in order to check a situation created by food hoarding and speculative activity.

He commented yesterday that a lot of copper could be produced and sold in this country at 12½ cents a pound and bring a big profit. He did not want, he said, a repetition of the World War situation which saw the price rise to a peak of 36.3 cents per pound.

Holds Cotton Too Low

He remarked that the price of cotton was too low and ought to go up, despite the huge carryover or surplus of the staple.

So far as wheat is concerned, Mr. Roosevelt said present prices were below the level of parity with prices of articles wheat growers have to buy. The Administration effort to attain parity prices, however, does not mean that wheat will go to $2, $3 or $5 a bushel, but, he believed, somewhere around $1.15 or $1.20.

The President took occasion to emphasize that if wheat rises to parity the price of bread will be increased by an inappreciable amount.

He did not indicate what action may be resorted to in case copper prices skyrocket. One obvious recourse would be an anti-trust suit if it were felt that prices were being fixed by collusive action of the larger copper-producing companies.

260 Americans Reach N. Y. On British Boat

9 Submarine Warnings Sounded on Trip by Zig-Zag Course at Sea

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 12.—All ships plying the perilous North Atlantic proceeed cautiously today as belligerent powers tightened their surveillance of the seas.

Reporting graphic indications of mid-Atlantic dangers, the British liner Arandora Star slipped into port with 260 relieved Americans among her 441 passengers. Nine submarine warnings were issued during the crossing.

The final warning came as the ship approached American shores. Officers said an unidentified submarine yesterday was reported operating off Nantucket lightship, 139 miles northeast of New York.

Roma Sails Eastward

Shortly after arrival of the British ship, neutral Italy's liner Roma, embellished with new red, white and green stripes, the national colors, sailed with no Americans aboard—after an 18-day tie-up here. Italy has announced normal shipping operations would be resumed, but it was obvious the Roma was taking every precaution to make her neutral identity entirely clear.

Meanwhile, the German Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd lines ordered wholesale dismissals of their employes here, effective September 30, because of the tieup of their ships.

The British Furness Line canceled all operations to the British possessions, effective at the end of this week.

Aquitania Due in N. Y.

The Arandora Star, leaving Southampton two days before war was declared, followed a zig-zag course far off the normal line. She carried $17,500,000 in gold. A complete "black-out" enveloped her. She had no convoy. Lifeboats were prepared for emergency use.

Following her was the Cunard White Star liner Aquitania, second largest of the line's transatlantic fleet. She was reported "somewhere at sea" bound for New York with 1,638 passengers. No definite arrival time was obtainable.

Both the Van Dyck, a Lamport & Holt liner, operated by Cunard, with 500 passengers, and the Cameronia, of the British Anchor Line, with 786, were due in from Europe tomorrow morning.

The Holland America Liner Westernland also was due tomorrow with 560 passengers.

Ordered to bring back stranded Americans, the Shawnee of the Clyde Mallory Line was scheduled to sail Wednesday for Europe without passengers. The Iroquois, Shawnee's sister; and the Acadia of the Eastern Steamship Line, arrived today to prepare for sailings by the end of the week. The Eastern's St. John also will sail for Europe at approximately the same time.

10,000 Still in Britain

Ten thousand Americans still are in the United Kingdom and Ireland, the American Embassy disclosed at London.

Seven thousand are in England, Scotland and Wales and 4,000 do not have passage to the United States. The 3,000 others are in Ireland.

Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, was among passengers crowding the United States Liner Washington which sailed for New York today. The ship is expected to carry 1,700 to 2,000 persons.

Nazis Warn Neutrals

Berlin, Sept. 12 (INS).—The foreign office mouthpiece, diplomatic correspondence, tonight warned neutrals Germany would consider it an unfriendly act if they bowed to the British blockade.

The statement set out to define the economic neutrality of Holland, Belgium and the Scandinavian countries and quoted a Nazi government opinion "that according to international law, economic law, economic neutrality means continuation of normal exchange of goods."

"Germany," the statement continued, "is prepared to continue her normal exports and imports and expects neutral countries to do the same. She will consider it an unneutral act if those neutrals permit the imposition or restrictions or formal controls against Germany."

pound, and wool tops around 1-3 of a cent. Cotton moved narrowly.

The average of 60 representative stocks showed a gain for the day of 70 cents at $52.90, where it was only 50 cents from the year's high reached last January, but it was still a long way from the recovery top of $75.30, registered March 10, 1937. Trading was still at a strenuous pace, but the turnover of 4,168,560 shares was about 500,000 under yesterday's.

Rails and utilities, which had been lagging during the rise in the industrial war favorites, were given a whirl. New York Central was the most active issue on the board, closing at $20.75, up $1.75. United States Steel was next, rising to finish at $82.50, highest in more than a year, and up $4.50. Bethlehem Steel, down more than $6 in the selling wave, gained all but $1 of its loss.

The Associated Press daily price index of 35 basic staples (based on 1926 as 100) came up .65 of a point to 72.75, almost up to last week's top of 72.95. Its low for 1939 was 63.78 on August 15, but it has by no means regained the losses since its recovery peak of 1937, which was 98.4, reached on April 5.

Here are a few approximate spot prices of standard grades of basic staples in primary wholesale markets, compared with August 31, and a year ago:

fortifications from which the Poilus jumped off.

The French tactics in the drive against Saarbruecken were typical of those they have used to date.

First, French scouting and fighting planes roared out over the German positions fighting the air clear.

Armored units followed rolling down on the German concrete pillboxes and crashing through barbed-wire entanglements.

Behind these came fighting engineers who mopped up German "suicide squads" which the tanks and squad cars had left behind.

Saarbruecken Emptied

One of the most important jobs of these soldiers, whose spades are almost as vital as their rifles, is to feel out concealed mines and explode them before the main bodies begin moving in to establish and fill the lines.

Wooded positions, such as hills Nos. 285, 284, 282 and 265, lying less than 5 miles west of the city, formed commanding heights from which French artillery was able to pour shells into the outlying fortifications of Saarbruecken, which has been emptied of inhabitants by the Germans.

The 155 millimeter long rifles which the French were understood to be using are effective up to 7 miles.

For full understanding of this phase of the Western Front operations it is necessary to picture the German Siegfried fortifications as lying about 7½ miles behind Saarbruecken, capital of the Saar mining area.

Counterattacks Halted

The city is 30 airline miles southeast of the Moselle and 60 miles west of the Rhine. Close to Saarbruecken the Saar River enters Germany from France and parallels the frontier a few miles on the German side.

Because of its importance industrially and as a bridgehead, the Germans have constructed at Saarbruecken what are believed to be the strongest advance positions of the Siegfried Line.

Activity in this sector and 7 miles to the southeast in the Bitche Plateau overshadowed German counter-attacks along the Moselle Valley farther north.

Although Germans attacked in strength and at first retook advance positions several hundred yards in depth, the French reported they had halted the German attack.

First Major Offensive

The Saar battle is developing slowly into what apparently is the first major operation of the Western Front, although the French, who have carried the attack to German territory, have not made contact with Germany's main "west wall."

Basel, Switzerland, Sept. 12 (AP).—The German town of Hornbach, less than 2 miles from the tip of the Bitche frontier salient of the Western Front, was described tonight as a no man's land which for two days has been pounded by both Maginot and Siegfried line guns.

The population has moved out, as well as from the Bavarian towns of Zwiebruecken, whose two bridges carry the vital rail supply line behind the Siegfried line, and Pirmasens, manufacturing town behind the eastern section of the line.

Behind French lines in this Saarbruecken-Bitche sector, according to reports reaching Basel, lay a dozen towns and villages.

More than a week of calm reportedly relaxed tension along the southern French-German border. Frenchmen whose comrades were engaging in bitter battles just around the frontier bend on the Western Front swam in the Rhine in plain view of the opposite forts.

German trains, headed for Italy with thousands of tons of coal, rolled south clearly visible to the naked eyes of French artillerymen sitting behind the powerful Maginot forts across the river.

German rail traffic increased to such an extent that no less than 30 trains of coal cars crossed the Basel rail bridge to the south.

Friday a station at Muttenz near Basel checked through 2,100 tons of coal. Southbound German traffic Saturday was 3,450 tons, all bound over St. Gotthard Pass for Italy to be exchanged for food supplies.

Specific approval of the commission will be required hereafter. Violations of the order will carry a penalty of five years imprisonment, or $5,000 fine, or both, and forfeiture of the ship or ships to the Government.

Nazis to Wage 'Eye-for-Eye' Sea Warfare

2 More Vessels Sunk; Loss of Ships Mounts To 118,533 Tons

By the Associated Press

Shipping losses mounted to at least 118,533 tons yesterday as Germany announced an "eye-for-an-eye" campaign in the merciless struggle for mastery of the seas.

The tonnage loss did not include cargoes and excluded also an unidentified German destroyer which went down with an undetermined loss of life. At least 181 are known to have perished in the other sinkings.

Yesterday's losses included the new British oil tanker Inverliffey, built for a London company by the Nazis at Hamburg last year, and the picturesque old Finnish bark Olivebank which struck a mine about 105 miles southwest of Esbjerg, Denmark.

The Olivebank, a 2,795-ton vessel in the England-Finland trade, exploded with a great roar, killing 14 men. Seven were saved.

The Inverliffey was attacked by a submarine near Havre. Her crew of approximately 40 was rescued by the Standard Oil tanker R. G. Stewart and transferred later to the City of Joliet, American freighter bound for Antwerp from New Orleans.

The 9,456-ton Inverliffey had been running oil from Texas ports to England and was owned by the Inver Tankers Co. of London.

Twenty-seven ships are known to have plunged to the bottom—victims of submarines, mines and naval shelling. Three German merchantmen have run aground on the rocky Norwegian coast after changing their routes to avoid British men-o'-war.

British losses to date total 16 merchantmen—all sunk by U-boats. Known German losses total 9: 3 mined, 3 chased aground and 3 sunk by British warships.

The French have lost 1, and neutral nations 4—all victims of mines.

Besides these, it is possible other ships have been sent to the bottom without warning or exploded on striking mines before an S.O.S. could be dispatched.

The crew of the British freighter Firby, torpedoed Monday, was rescued by an unidentified vessel, the American freighter Scannpenn reported yesterday.

With Britain claiming she had established a blockade and run Nazi ships off the surface of the seas, the German government announced in Berlin that it would let England set the blockade pace but the Reich would match it below—"eye for eye, tooth for tooth."

Asked whether a neutral ship found carrying contraband would be allowed to return to its home port, a German official in Berlin said:

"Certainly not. Then it would simply look around for some other way of reaching England. So there is nothing left for us to do in such a case except sink it."

Shhh! Don't Look Now, but He Looks Like a Foreigner—a Spy!

G-Men Are Working Overtime As Zealous Citizens Phone: 'Suspicious Man in Apartment . . . He's a Foreign Agent

By George W. Thorpe.

"There's a suspicious man in our apartment house . . . keeps lights burning until 3 every morning . . . speaks with a German accent . . . we're sure he's a foreign agent."

It's open season on spies in Washington. G-men are working overtime investigating thousands of letters and telephone calls from citizens hoping to aid the Government's anti-espionage drive, but not all of these tips lead to a bona fide spy.

The FBI, however, is overlooking no bets in the drive against espionage and sabotage ordered by Attorney General Murphy after the President's proclamation of a national emergency.

Every letter or telephone call that comes to the eyes or ears of Uncle Sam's agents is thoroughly investigated, no matter how baseless it may seem at first glance.

Immediately on its receipts the information is turned over to one of the bureau's 800 investigators who follows up the tip according to a well-practiced system.

First step in the process is to look into the occupation of the suspect. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, it was said, a man's means of support will either clear him or establish him, in fact, as a potential spy. In that case, of course, the investigation is carried on rigorously.

Precautions have been taken that the FBI would not be short-handed in its emergency campaign. Appropriations have been realized for 150 new agents to augment the present staff of 800. If needed Director J. Edgar Hoover can call on policemen from various parts of the country who have been schooled in FBI methods at its special polic academy, now in its twelfth session. Graduates number approximately 550.

The agents will concentrate in cities of 100,000 or more, in accordance with the theory that spies stay clear of small towns and try to lose themselves in the cities.

That the espionage drive is already bringing results is apparent. G-men are reported to have taken into custody the chauffeur of a prominent Delaware man and a search of his personal effects is said to have revealed elaborate plans of American steel, oil and technical plants.

So far, however, Washington has yielded up no spies to the Federal agents. If there are any here, they are still at large.

'Ghost Liners' Wait Service Or Scrap Heap

4 Ships That Carried Doughboys Ride Beside Maryland Cornfield

By Hedley Donovan.

Four ships that have ploughed blue water for Kaiser Wilhelm II, President Wilson and the A. E. F. ride anchor today in tidewater Maryland, awaiting the bids of scrap iron salesmen or new service in a national emergency.

Their funnels tower incongruously over a Solomon's Island cornfield. A few watchmen patrol salt and sun-blistered decks. Engines that matched power with German U-boats are packed in grease.

Two or three times a year, however, Maritime Commission engineers clamber up the sides, fire the boilers and set the engines into brief motion. New reports are filed in Washington.

Total 42,000 Tons

The freshest reports indicate that the four vessels, with their capacity of 42,000 tons, are still available for service "if an extreme situation arises," commission officials said yesterday.

Extreme situations are nothing new to Mount Vernon, Monticello, America and George Washington. Laid down in German shipyards from 25 to 30 years ago, each liner in this ghost fleet of the Patuxent River has carried thousands of American soldiers to war against Germany.

The Mount Vernon, nee Kronprinzessin Cecilie, was the pride of Imperial Germany's merchant marine, the apple of its ruler's eye, "the Kaiser's yacht." The British fleet stood between the trim ship and home ports in 1914. She was laid up in Bar Harbar and Boston until the United States declared war on Germany.

One Was Torpedoed

When she put out to sea again, in 1917, the ship's clean lines were blurred by camouflage. Luxurious fittings of the Imperial suite had been ripped out to make room for doughboy bunks.

Twenty-one years ago last week and 250 miles off the French coast the Mount Vernon was torpedoed. In pitch-black, flooded boiler rooms, where 37 men had been killed, the crew pumped, shoveled and slowly built up speed. No soldier's life was lost.

That was as close as any of the Patuxent flotilla came to destruction.

It was the Monticello, christened Kaiser Wilhelm II, at Bremerhaven, that sounded the "abandon ship" call on another night in 1918 after colliding with a second American transport. Stop-gap repairs were made and the ship limped into Brest, its hull badly damaged, but no lives lost.

Another Carried Wilson

The George Washington is the only ship which has carried an American President in office to Europe. Woodrow Wilson sailed on her in December, 1918. When Wilson wanted to warn the Allied statesmen of his dissatisfaction with the course of negotiations at the Paris Peace Conference, he ordered the George Washington made ready for sailing within 24 hours. When he finally returned, after signing the Treaty of Versailles, he was a passenger on the George Washington.

For the America, which had been "Amerika" in the Hamburg-America line, the dramatic climax of sea-going days came a decade after its last transport service. Under Capt. George Fried the America raced through a wild February blizzard to save the crew of the Italian steamer Florida. The rescue operations were widely acclaimed as one of the greatest feats in the history of navigation.

The America and George Washington were replaced 7 years ago by modern liners. The Monticello and Mount Vernon have been laid up since the war. Grotesque paint patterns of their camouflage days have long since peeled away, exposing rusty hulls.

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—Universal Pictures, Inc., today reported for 39 weeks ended July 29 consolidated profit, after all charges but before Federal income tax, of $989,995.

This compared with loss of $753,107 for the comparable 1938 period.

will last three years or longer, as determined by the British "inner cabinet" at its session last Saturday;

A policy to be followed of continuously worrying the Germans on the Western Front as a cat worries a mouse, but no dismal offensives against the strongly-fortified German line, as on the Somme and at Passchendaele in the World War which would be costly in lives of men and productive of little gain strategically;

Every effort to be made to find another frontier on which to attack the Germans with land forces backed by the air arm;

Economic warfare to be waged to the hilt, including intensive efforts to build up and maintain huge allied reserves of materials and including strict enforcement of the blockade of the Reich.

These, it is believed, were among the matters considered at the war council session.

British authorities conceded officially yesterday that a large number of Royal Air Force planes was active on the Western Front. Obviously, the Allies intend their combined air forces to play a big role in the "worrying tactics" planned for that front, and they are banking on securing air superiority in that quarter as the war progresses and German fuel runs low.

Paris, Sept. 12.—The foreign affairs committee of the Chamber of Deputies today adopted a resolution demanding the right to call on cabinet ministers for full information regarding the progress of the war.

The belief that the French parliament is being held at arms-length by the government is heightened by the report that when Premier Daladier completes the formation of the war cabinet—a job on which he has been engaged since outbreak of the conflict—the chamber will not be convoked to hear a declaration from the new cabinet.

Daladier is understood to have renounced, at least for the present, any idea of forming a new cabinet on the "national union" basis. It is said, however that he has persuaded Marshal Petain to accept a cabinet post. Petain went back to Burgos today to resume his duties as Ambassador to Spain but he is expected to return to Paris in a few days.

Russia Reports Revolts in Polish Ukraine

Slows Up Troop Calls; To Punish Speculators As Run Depletes Food

By G. E. R. Gedye.

Copyright by New York Times.

Moscow, Sept. 12—Although even yesterday a certain number of reservists received orders to report for service with the colors the process was slowed up today.

There is no diminution in panic purchases, however. Cigarettes and tobacco were added to the long lists of goods virtually unobtainable in Moscow at the moment owing to the unexpected rush to lay in stocks.

Authorities are said to be taking steps to speed up production and transportation in order to replenish Moscow stocks. The present deficiencies inflict serious hardships on the majority of Moscow housewives, who did not join in the first rush. Today potatoes and cabbages were among articles for which in the absence of less perishable commodities, long queues formed.

It was announced tonight that the public prosecutor, following an investigation, had ordered stern measures against speculators who bought up necessities for resale at private profit.

Included in a Moscow broadcast of news tonight was a report said to have come from Rumania, which, apart from the question of its accuracy, may be of significance as to future Russians moves. According to this report, revolts were starting in certain areas of Galicia.

Ukrainian peasants were said to have risen up against certain measures of Polish authorities and to have burned the manor houses of a number of Polish landowners.

Soviet popular lectures were endeavoring to allay the oft-expressed anxiety that victorious German troops reaching the frontiers might attack Russia.

Pershing to Issue Statement

correspondence. When he walks through the grounds of Walter Reed he uses a cane, but then he used a cane before his illness.

In the last few days Gen. Pershing's mail has been swelled by birthday greetings. Many are from doughboys who in 1917-18 would have bet a month's pay that they would never indulge in such sentimentality.

Gen. Pershing has changed a lot since the time in France Heywood Broun wrote "They will never call him Papa Pershing." But so have the men served under him. For one thing, they have a greater appreciation of the discipline which once brought curses in their newly acquired French.

Visits Dentist Downtown

As part of his check-up at the hospital, Gen. Pershing yesterday was required to come downtown and visit a dentist. It was thought he might visit his office, but he apparently went directly back to his two-room suite at Walter Reed.

This office of Gen. Pershing is the last unit of the War Department remaining in the old State, War and Navy Building, across from the White House. The Navy went down to Constitution avenue in the World War days, and so did part of the War Department. Finally, a month ago, Secretary Woodring and all other Army officials except Pershing cleared out, leaving the rococo building to the State Department, the President's new assistants with a passion for anonymity and a few offices of the Budget Bureau.

Impressive Office

Gen. Pershing's office, one of the most impressive in Washington, is on the second floor and looks out on the White House. On the walls are portraits of five American soldiers—Washington, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Pershing. The rank of "General of the Armies" was created by Congress for Washington at a time when it appeared he might have to take the field against France. However, he never assumed it. Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Pershing did.

When fire swept the White House executive offices in the last Administration, President Hoover used Gen. Pershing's office while repairs were being made. The martial atmosphere, however, was too much for Mr. Hoover. He moved out all the portraits except that of Gen. Washington.

Swastika Marked Plane Is Reported Off New England

Boston, Sept. 12 (AP).—A mysterious "swastika marked" airplane, flying over the same general area where an unidentified submarine has been in operation, was reported today by a group of American trawlers, fishing approximately 190 miles off this port.

Simultaneously, the trawler Delaware reported it had been informed by the trawler Shawmut on Georges Banks that a submarine had come up close beside it on Sunday night.

This was the fourth report of a submarine off the New England coast. The first came last week from the Pollock Rip lightship, followed by another from the fishing schooner Frances C. Denehy, which said a strange undersea craft had been sighted last Wednesday and Thursday on Georges Bank. Still another report of a submarine—this time off Nantucket Lightship—came today from officers of the British Arandora Star, which docked safely in New York.

ities clamped down the strictest silence on the Windsors' movements.

It was reported that the Duke and Duchess passed the night and were now staying at the country home of Maj. Edward Dudley Metcalfe, who was equerry and aide-de-camp to the Duke as Prince of Wales and was best man when he married the former Mrs. Simpson on June 3, 1937.

All telephone inquiries at the Metcalfe home, 35 miles from London, met with the bland response from a member of the household that "They're not here although everybody seems to think so."

An official at Buckingham Palace said that he had heard nothing as to where the Windsors were staying, and insisted that no other members of the royal family had seen them yet.

It was believed that after remaining briefly "somewhere in the country" the Windsors would take up residence at Fort Belvedere.

It was recalled that in his farewell broadcast soon after the instrument of abdication was signed, the former King Edward said, "... if at any time in the future I can be found of service to His Majesty in a private station, I shall not fail."

It is to fulfill this promise that he has returned. He is on the active list of three fighting services, holding the ranks of Admiral of the Fleet, Field Marshal of the Army and Air Marshal of the Royal Air Force. His seniority in these services dates from January 12, 1936. He is still colonel-in-chief of the Welsh Guards, his own regiment.

Canada Draws Its Belt Tight To Finance War

Expect It to Last Years; Drastic Taxes to Pay as They Go

By John MacCormac
Copyright by New York Times.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 12.—War thrust its iron hand into Canada's pocketbook today when drastic taxation on excess profits, incomes, both individual and corporate, liquor, tobacco, tea and coffee were announced.

Earlier and to a greater extent than in the last war Canada is attempting to "pay as you go." Though there may be a carefully regulated credit expansion until the country's industry has been put on a war basis, inflation has been rejected as a means of paying war costs themselves. What can not be obtained immediately from taxation is to be borrowed from its own citizens at rates which are not expected to be high.

No Canadian will be able to escape paying for the war under the new taxes. Even the soldier in the field will have to find 2½ cents more for his packet of cigarettes.

Income Surtax of 20 Per Cent

There will be a war surtax on individual incomes of 20 per cent of the total income tax already payable. The corporation income tax rate will be increased from the present 15 to 18 per cent and in the case of consolidated returns from 17 to 20 per cent. All these imports are expected to add $21,000,000 to Canada's revenues for the remainder of this fiscal year and $82,000,000 in a full year. The biggest revenue producer, though its returns can not be estimated will, however, be the excess profits tax.

This tax will be on the excess profits of all businesses but they may elect to be taxed under either of two plans. Under the first they will pay on profits in excess of 5 but not more than 10 per cent of capital a tax of 10 per cent; on profits between 10 and 15 per cent, a tax of 20 per cent; between 15 and 20, 30 per cent; between 20 and 25 40 per cent; over 25, 60 per cent.

Expect War to Last Years

Under the second alternative they may pay a 50 per cent tax on all profits in excess of their average profits for the last four years. These taxes will be in addition to war surtaxes on income but in calculating profits income tax will be allowed as a deductible expense. The reason for allowing alternative methods is that some businesses have higher risks than others, others smaller capital in relation to output.

Introducing his war budget in Canada's War Parliament today J. L. Ilsley, acting minister of finance, explained that his government was planning for an expensive mechanized war to last for years. Canada would enter it with an unbalanced budget and a bigger national debt, but with an enormous increase of Canadian savings replacing the 1914 need for vast imports of foreign capital and more diversified industries.

Guerrilla War Takes Toll Behind Nazi Line

By Otto D. Tolischus
Copyright by The New York Times.

With German Armies in Poland, Sept. 12.—No less than four big battles are now under way in Poland simultaneously—the battle of Warsaw; the battle of Lemberg; the battle of Kutno, and the battle of Radom.

In all of them the Polish army is trying to stop with flesh and blood the mighty German mechanized war machine.

In the Radom pocket, four divisions have been trapped. Troops have already begun surrendering at Kutno where another five or six divisions are encircled. The capture of Lemberg (Lwow) is merely a matter of days, and how long Warsaw can hold out, now that it is virtually surrounded, remains to be seen.

But though hopelessly outclassed in the military field, the Poles are falling back on that factor which helped them to survive a century and a half of subjugation by partition, namely their intense national consciousness, their capacity of hating their conquerors. Losing the war at the front they are carrying war on behind the front and out of the blacked ruins of their towns and villages are arising hatreds of next hundred years.

Fights From Ambush

It is this fanatical hatred which had bred "franctireur" behind the front that is playing perhaps larger a role in the Polish war than most others. To the German soldier, a "franctireur" is an outlaw who fights in the dark from ambush whom he cannot recognize or cope with—unless he catches him in the act. And then woe to those caught.

At the same time fanatical hatred of the conqueror has a way of getting mixed up with other smoldering hatreds—the hatred of race, class and personal grievances which in the general lawlessness of war, lead to explosions and tortures and slaughters of Germans in Poland for which the Nazis produce documented evidence.

The stories of these slaughters of franctireur strike one immediately crossing into the war zone. They are told by soldiers whose lips quiver with anger.

At Wieruszow for instance the first Polish border town opposite Oels, the former Crown Prince's country estate, a florid-faced German sergeant explained why the whole center of the town had been gutted and now consisted only of charred ruins.

"Shot Them, You Bet"

"Franctireurs," he said "when the first German troops had passed here everything was quiet because the Polish army had retreated. Suddenly from that clump of trees over there franctireurs opened fire. We lost 21 men; then after them we found 50 Jews hiding behind trees. This is a town of 6,000 and 4,000 Jews. They shot at us.

"What did you do with them?" he was asked.

"Shot them, you bet," was the reply. And the town?

"Oh, our artillery peppered inflammatory shells into it. It went up in smoke."

It is a story that can be duplicated in many towns of western Poland. In fact, wherever there is a destroyed town, and there are quite a number of them, the usual answer is "franctireurs," and like as not the word "franctireur" is coupled with the word "Jew," until it might appear that Jews, rather than Poles, are leaders in franctireur war.

"Women Are Worst"

However, the speaker of another group of soldiers closer to the front, who showed a bullet that had hit his supply truck, amplified:

"The worst are the women. They meet you with babies in their arms and a razor or a pistol hidden in their bosom, and then when it's dark or your back is turned they shoot at you or slit your throat. Also, Polish soldiers are under order to disguise themselves as peasants to continue the war behind the front."

There are German soldiers in Poland who assert that the German casualties greater behind the front than at the front.

On the other side, the price for that is paid mostly by Jews, for Jews form the majority of the urban population in the towns in the battle area and also own the principal business establishments in the centers of these towns. Whether such a town is destroyed they are the principal losers, and today the survivors sit on the ruins and weep.

Nazis Admit 12,000 Casualties

With the Southern German Army Near the San River, Sept. 12 (U.P.).—German military officials estimated today that Nazi forces in Poland have suffered between 12,000 and 15,000 casualties, about one division, mostly in the last two days. The number of troops actually killed in battle was estimated at between 1,500 and 2,000.

The San River fighting intensified and the German advance was slow compared to the 12 and 15 mile forward pushes of the preceding day, indicating that contact with the left wing of the main Polish army of the south finally had been made.

The impression is prevalent that the San River resistance may develop into a major operation.

The fact that the Germans said they had suffered the bulk of their casualties in the past two days, in a drive on Radom, directly south of Warsaw and southeastward toward the San River, indicated that a bloody and perhaps decisive battle was raging on the Eastern Front.

Roosevelt Restates Monroe Doctrine

and factories provided they will pay cash and carry their purchases home.

"To depart from this American policy at this time is an unneutral act."

He said the friends of Hitler are now urging that "inasmuch as since May 1 we cannot sell airplanes to a belligerent nation, we should likewise prohibit the sale of oil necessary to operate the planes—and as we cannot sell explosives we should prohibit the sale of cotton used in manufacturing explosives."

They will doubtless argue, he predicted, that "we should prohibit the sale of food because food is necessary to win a war."

Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the Federal Security Agency, said in a radio talk last night he was "convinced that the bulk of the American people stand squarely behind the President" in his view of international affairs.

The people realize, McNutt said "that their peace can never be safe so long as any nation or group of nations is at liberty to stage a raid upon any part of the earth not surrounded by a wall of steel."

At Chicago, the American Farm Bureau Federation's directors adopted a resolution urging repeal of the embargo in favor of cash-and-carry trade in munitions with all nations.

On the other side, Senator Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, agreed with Borah's assertion that repeal of the embargo would draw this country into the war.

Nye said only a public realization of the consequences of repeal is necessary to balk it, and announced establishment of an "information bureau" here to that end.

"I hope, of course," he added, "that there will be no filibuster, but sometimes a fight becomes so important a filibuster is justified."

Vandenberg declared:

"You can't become an arsenal for one belligerent without ultimately becoming a target for the other. Two years ago we enacted by overwhelming majorities, and the President signed, a neutrality law incorporating an embargo on arms.

"At that time we were in a position to deal objectively with the situation, uninfluenced by our emotions and sympathies. To change our policy now would obviously make us unneutral, a position the President himself has affirmed he does not wish to take."

Charles Sawyer, Democratic national committeeman from Ohio, said after a White House conference that he is convinced "the public generally is with the President" on the repeal proposal.

Secretary of State Hull said at his press conference that since the halting and searching of the American steamship Wacosta by a German submarine, the State Department is assembling all possible facts on British and German blockade activities with a view to issuing a statement on this country's stand.

C. of C. Asks Repeal

New York, Sept. 12 (A.P.).—The executive committee of the State Chamber of Commerce urged President Roosevelt and Congress tonight to make this Nation "impregnable," and asked repeal of certain provisions of the neutrality act which the committee said actually placed the United "tales in an "unneutral" position.

War Outcome May Hinge on Rome Parley

Secrecy Surrounds Talks Between Ciano And British Envoy

By the Associated Press

Rome, Sept. 12.—Diplomatic circles expressed belief tonight that the outcome of the European war and the future of Europe hinged on diplomatic conversations now under way between Great Britain and Italy.

The deepest secrecy shrouds the repeated conferences between Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano and British Ambassador Loraine.

The British-Italian conversations follow by a week talk between the French ambassador, Andre Francois-Poncet, and Count Ciano, after which the French envoy returned to Paris to report.

Meanwhile, a Japanese military mission which has been visiting Italian arms factories at Turin since the signature of the German-Soviet Russian nonaggression pact caused it to cancel a trip to Germany, now is said to be considering a trip to London. Japanese sources said a decision would be made after the mission returns to Rome next Friday.

No diplomat of any other country pretends to have precise information on what is being discussed among the French and British allies and Italy but most of the diplomatic corps believe a move of the greatest importance is afoot.

Some shrewd analysts in the corps have ideas about the conversations, however.

These quarters now generally scout the idea of peace after Germany conquers Poland—if she does. They believe Britain and France will not give in, for it would be a defeat by default. Likewise, they believe Mussolini realizes Great Britain and France are determined to fight Adolf Hitler for years if necessary.

The analysts express the belief that Mussolini is in a key position—his entrance into the war on either side might decide it.

Should he join Germany and should the combination win, they said, he would have the choice of picking British and French properties around the Mediterranean and in Africa.

But he would be faced with a terrific offensive from France, the possible closing of the Suez Canal and the immediate loss of Ethiopia, and attacks on Libya from both Tunisia and Egypt.

If Mussolini joins Britain and France, the diplomatic quarters hold, the position would be reversed.

With 250 miles of frontier with Germany protected by Alpine peaks, Mussolini would have little to fear from a Reich occupied on two other fronts.

On the other hand, he could provide Britain and France with a new frontier to harass Germany and could cut off Germany's supplies from the south.

It was widely believed in the diplomatic corps that Italy's entrance into the war on the side of Great Britain and France would galvanize the recently formed neutral bloc in southeastern Europe into action against Germany.

The chief obstacle, in the opinion of these diplomats, is that at present Great Britain and France have offered no price approaching the spoils Italy would reap on Germany's side.

Meanwhile, the Italian press has become more circumspect than ever, refraining from attacking either Britain or France while indicating, however, their continued sympathy with the Germans.

Entertainment at Night Spots

MUSICAL NEUTRALITY. Meyer Davis, who has around 100 bands playing at spots all over the country, has instructed his leaders not to play any foreign national anthem, regardless of the importance of the person making the request. "If we play any nationalistic music," says M. D., "it'll be American only."

One of the finest bands in the East has been selected for the fall season in the Metronome Room, beginning September 29. We can't tell you the name, but, let's see—suppose you try to remember which orchestra you liked best at Virginia Beach this summer.

RINGSIDE CAMERA. Shoreham Blue Room. Attorney General Frank Murphy and Paul V. McNutt occupying tables on opposite sides of the dance floor . . . The Chicago White Sox dining circumspectly, rushing off early to beddy-bye-bye—training rules . . . Commissioner Elizade, of the Philippines, enjoying the funning around of Clown Billy Dale and the sleek dancing of Noll and Nolan, plus Jean Savage.

Lounge Viviera. Pretty Belle Smith (sang at the Pall Mall last season), squired by Billy Russell . . . Jane Eustis with a double portion of beaus, George Wheeler and Tinsley Adams . . . Jimmy Stiles, the decorator . . . Ross de Roy, of the Capitol Theater Orchestra.

Leroy Thayer, president of the Dancing Masters of America, will head the judging committee of the Harvest Moon Ball and its preceding contests. First phase of the Harvest Moon Ball will be the tango contest in the Rainbow Room at 10:30 next Friday eve. Orchestra Leader Milton Davis, of the Rainbow Room, has cooked up some rare tango arrangements for the occasion.

CHAMPAGNE AND ORCHIDS were not the only luxury items in the big party that crammed the redecorated Mayflower Lounge with the local gentry last evening. Between the whimsical dancing of the Hartmans and the pickpocketing pranks of the one and only Giovanni, the party was in a continual gust of hilarity. Giovanni lifted keys, wrist watches, wallets and small change with equal ease. But when he relieved that unsuspecting gent of his suspenders—my-o-my! Dick Koons' music is lighter and brighter than ever and the new Mayflower singer, Patricia Ryan, proved to be a gay and fascinating little person.

Carolina Carolers. With the arrival of Singer Hazel Warren in the Hour Glass, our town now has a full quartet of Carolina canaries. They include Mary La Marr, of the Madrillon, Lyde Swygert, of the Rainbow Room, and Eve Knight, of the King Cole Room.

OH, GEE! OH! GOSH!

Did an electric fan ever blow the leaves of your calendar askew, leading you to make a mistake in dates? That's how this column happened to take the liberty of opening the Shar-Zad Room this evening instead of Friday, the date set by the management. (Well, it's our story and we're in no mood to argue.) When Shar-Zad opens on Friday, you'll find one of the swankiest of parties, fun unlimited, Bill McCune's up-and-coming music and lovely new singer, Catherine Hoyt. We understand that the chief difficulty occasioned by this mix-up in dates is that a lot of people put in hurry-up reservations for the opening.

Art Baker, Mayfair's chief entertainer, thinks he's descended from Hannibal, the Carthaginian conqueror. Anyway, his first name is really Hannibal. The kids at school used to call him "Cannibal."

SUPER-JITTERBUGS are Jerry and Turk in the new show at the Lotus. You never saw such carryings-on! The only way to describe their dancing is to say that it seems to combine epilepsy and creeping paralysis. They wind up with an insane skit that Turk presents as the "Boogie-woogie from 'Wuthering Heights'." The balance of the revue is almost on a par with the colossal Jerry and Turk. Especially exotic is the "Swamp Fire" number of the Kretlow dancers. And that bathing suit parade!

Clyde Rounds, of the Neptune Room's Couriers, and George Smith, of Lou Williams' Trio at Maryland Gardens, have both recently returned from orchestra tours in South America. It seems that North American swing sounds as exotic to our South American friends as their sambas and rhumbas do to us.

BROWN DERBY DRAMA. Al and George, of the Brown Derby, are feverishly rehearsing the stupendous drama they'll present at their fifteenth anniversary party on Friday evening. Are they going to make the Barrymores look silly! After attending one rehearsal we came away with the impression that this opus will be a combination of low comedy, high tragedy and hoss opera. Al is now thinking of calling it "Vandals of 1939."

Hi Hat Figures. Jack Manning, leader of Hi Hat's Strings of Romance, figures that he and his lads sing 200 songs at the afternoon and evening cocktail sessions every day. But this doesn't bother them because they have 2,500 songs in their library.

BAMBOO BARREL ROLLING. Two beer barrels painted a beautiful blue figure in the clever dance to "B. R. Polka" being done by Dargan and Guthridge at Bamboo Gardens. Not to be outdone are the Hollywood Coeds who dance over chairs and while sitting on them. Emerson Frome contributes to the high-tension stepping mania with an excellent take-off of Bill (Bojangles) Robinson.

The A. T. & S. jitterbug contest wound up in a blaze of fun. While Manager Tom Taylor is thinking up a new stunt, he'll continue to stage Wednesday shrimp feasts, Thursday spaghetti feasts and Friday crab feasts.

COMMISSARY DEPARTMENT. Those fine vegetables raised and served at O'Donnell's Farms are also exported to O'Donnell's restaurant in town . . The Uptown cocktail lounge is more than that. They serve tasty satisfying dinners, too. Just the right follow-up for a couple of double cocktails . . . The reason they didn't have any crabs at Dick's Grill for a couple of days after the cloudburst was because shipments were inferior. Dick said, "We'll have the best crabs or none at all."

Newest orchestra in town is Larry Ryan's Tribesmen. They'll play for dances at the Knights of Columbus Club every Friday.

Deflating Hysteria

In suspending the quotas which restricted the importation and domestic marketing of sugar, President Roosevelt struck a dramatic blow at the hysteria which has prevailed in some circles over food supplies and prices. The President had previously indicated that no shortage of basic commodities is in prospect, and had sought cooperation of retailers in preventing sudden and unwarranted price advances. Presumably his suspension of the sugar quotas was designed to remove all doubt in the minds of skeptical housewives as well as to curb speculation in this commodity.

Actually, of course, there has been no shortage of sugar. For a few days it was difficult to buy that commodity because sudden demands had diminished or exhausted the meager stocks of retailers. All informed persons knew, however, that an abundant supply of sugar is available. It was only the memory of the shortage during the World War which induced many persons to lay in a supply, without regard for the sharp differences between the previous war period and the present situation.

The price of sugar had already turned downward before President Roosevelt acted. It was not necesary to suspend all quotas and open the domestic market to unlimited shipments of sugar to accomplish the desired result. The Administration might better have increased the allotments of the various areas producing sugar for the United States. Had such action been accompanied by an announcement that quotas would be further expanded to insure an ample supply of this commodity during the war period, normal conditions in the sugar market could have been quickly restored.

It may be assumed, however, that quotas will again be put into effect when all fear of a sugar famine has been eliminated from the public mind. The hysteria on that subject has already been deflated. Hoarders and speculative buyers have learned to their sorrow that the skyrocketing of prices was entirely unwarranted by the actual relationship between supply and demand. With this flurry of excitement over, it will be possible to re-establish reasonable quotas that will protect the interests of both producers and consumers.

Clarifying Decision

Justice Rutledge's decision in the case of the District insurance superintendent against the Group Health Association adds another interesting chapter to the controversy over the legal standing of medical organizations. A few weeks ago Justice Proctor of the District Court ruled that the GHA is not engaged in trade. Now the Court of Appeals, in a different case, has found that this organization is not participating in the insurance business.

To relieve the confusion which has grown up around this issue Justice Rutledge draws a detailed distinction between insurance agencies and the GHA. He clearly notes that the GHA is a consumer cooperative. It is the business of insurance agencies to protect their subscribers from the consequences of various hazards. "On the other hand," says the court, "the cooperative is concerned principally with getting service rendered to its members and doing so at lower prices made possible by quantity purchasing and economies in operation."

In sustaining demurrers to the indictment of the American Medical Association for violation of the antitrust laws, Justice Proctor raised vigorous objection to the attempt of the Department of Justice "to stretch an old statute to fit new uses for which it was never intended." The Court of Appeals has now rebuked District officials for proceeding against the GHA under the statute regulating insurance companies. If abuses in the management of such consumer cooperatives appear, the court says, "measures for their control should be enacted by the Legislature, not prescribed through judicial expansion of existing statutes designed for other organizations, activities and abuses."

Both decisions provide a salutary clearing of the atmosphere. In the face of unwarranted action against both the Medical Association and the GHA, the courts have taken the common-sense point of view. They have refused to distort partial similarities into identical relationships. That is a really hopeful trend which should assist in ironing out any differences that may remain between the groups sponsoring the GHA and the District Medical Society's health-service plan.

Corporation Counsel Seal will not appeal the decision of Justice Rutledge clarifying the legal status of the GHA. A similar decision might well have been made by the Department of Justice after Judge Proctor's decision. But if the case against the Medical Association is to be pressed further, it should at least follow the routine procedure. There seems to be no valid reason why it should be carried directly to the Supreme Court.

The Treasury's Problem

When war started in 1914, the debt of the Federal Government was approximately $1,000,000,000 and most of it was being used as a backing for national bank note issues. The Government was not then confronted by the problem of deficit financing, and the banks were not worried about the state of the Government bond market.

Today the fiscal position is radically different. The Federal debt—direct and contingent—exceeds $46,000,000,000, and at the end of last June the member banks of the Reserve System held $13,777,000,000 of United States Government obligations, constituting 42 per cent of their total loans and investments. Furthermore, with another large deficit in prospect, the Treasury will have to call upon the banks to give further aid in financing.

The decline in Government bond prices which has resulted from developments in Europe therefore creates some very special problems. The drop in quotations does not indicate any sudden loss of confidence in the Government's credit standing. But it does reflect a strong belief that the era of abnormally low interest rates is about to end. And rising interest rates inevitably result in declines in the value of fixed-interest securities.

There are good reasons for assuming that the war, especially if it should be prolonged, will bring expanded buying of American goods, and possibly a domestic business boom that would greatly increase the demand for capital funds. A priori reasoning, as well as past experience, point to a rise in interest rates if such conditions develop. And if this country should be drawn into the war, rapidly rising public expenditures and pressure for private credits with concomitant advances in prices, would make extra-heavy drafts upon loanable funds and accelerate advances in interest rates.

In the present unfavorable environment the Treasury must endeavor to maintain money-market conditions favorable to a continuance of deficit financing. And it also has to protect the banks, as chief owners and future buyers of Government issues, from the adverse effect of any pronounced drop in the price of these securities. For, as stated by a well-informed financial commentator, "the soundness of the banking system is now virtually dependent on the bond market's movements. And the Treasury has been placed in a position similar to that of the man who had the bull by the tail and couldn't let go."

The events of the past few days show that the Government fully realizes the importance of a stabilized bond market. In an effort to arrest the decline in U. S. bond prices, the Federal Reserve System bought more Government obligations in the week ended September 6 than in any previous week of its history.

Market analysts are losing sleep, pondering the effect of the war upon the bond market in general and the course of Government issues in particular. Much depends upon our ability to maintain our neutrality, as well as upon the duration of the war. If we escape being drawn into the conflict, and if war-induced business improvement should be pronounced, Treasury deficits would presumably decline and its obligations would be less vulnerable. Furthermore, the huge volume of member-bank excess reserves could support an immense expansion of credit without putting undue pressure upon the bond market.

In the midst of the many uncertainties that make prediction hazardous, one point is certain. If the United States should become a party to the war, the Treasury would face a serious difficulty in the form of the billions of outstanding indebtedness.

Ireland's Neutrality

The State of Eire has assumed a status of neutrality in the European war and intends, if possible, to preserve it. But the big question, as one official told a correspondent of the New York Times, is "Whom are we neutral against?"

Already it is obvious that both the De Valera government and the great majority of the Irish people have determined that neutrality shall not work to the benefit of Hitler and that their island shall not become a center of espionage. But the fact that Irish cinema audiences have been cheering pictures of the British King and Queen and of Prime Minister Chamberlain does not necessarily mean that the Irish have suddenly become ardently pro-Sassenach. It does, however, serve to illustrate how the sense of history, by which the Irish, even more than most people, are obsessed, is capable of working two ways.

In 1914 it produced a conflict of sympathies. To side against the traditional enemy, England, was to side against France, the traditional friend. Emphasis on that friendship, for a time, was a most effective recruiting slogan. The wild hope of enlisting the aid of England's enemy in the liberation of Ireland existed at first only in the hearts of a few intransigeants. But a series of blunders by the British liberals, beginning with the shelving of the home rule act, ultimately brought the "physical force men" into ascendancy.

Today the same historical sense has undoubtedly produced among the Irish a vigorous emotional allegiance to the cause of the Poles, to whose brilliant and sorrowful history the Irish were once so fond of comparing their own. In addition to this historical affinity there is also an equally powerful religious bond. Poland and Southern Ireland are the two most intensely Catholic countries of the world.

There are other reasons why Ireland, although neutral, has seen fit to put herself into "a state of defense." Already there have been blackouts in Dublin, Cork and other cities. It might seem pertinent for the Irish also to ask "Against whom are we defending ourselves?" But perhaps they know the answer already.

Except for the half-contemptuous encouragement given to Casement and the unsuccessful effort of the cruiser Aud to deliver its cargo of arms to the insurrectionary volunteers, the German high command paid precious little attention to Ireland during the World War. Today, there is reason to believe that, whether with or without encouragement of I. R. A. fugitives, the Nazis are seriously courting Eire. That Eire will respond favorably to such blandishments is most unlikely, however. She may continue to remain neutral but her neutrality is certain to have an anti rather than a pro-German bias.

The Issue Joined

When Hitler began his war on Poland he probably acted on the assumption that neither Great Britain nor France could render that country sufficient aid soon enough to save her from being overrun by German legions.

Thus far events have tended to bear out such calculations. The Poles have put up a brave and gallant fight. The stubborn defense of Warsaw is an eloquent indication of their determination to resist the enslavement of their country at no matter what cost. But the odds remain against them. Their allies are far away, held back on Germany's western frontier by a wall of steel and concrete exceedingly difficult to break through.

Should Poland be conquered, what then? It is taken for granted that the end of effective Polish resistance would see the launching by Hitler of a peace offensive designed to persuade Great Britain and France to lay down their arms and come to terms with the Third Reich. But any assumption that such a move will be successful rests on a miscalculation of British and French psychology that may be very costly to Hitler and the Third Reich.

The other day the British cabinet announced that it was laying plans for a war of three years' duration. This announcement suggested that the London government has no intention of throwing up the sponge at any point short of a final victory. It has since been followed by Anthony Eden's radio address in which the British secretary for the dominions flatly declared that Great Britain will never make peace with Hitler. "There will be no turning back," he said. "We have no quarrel with the German people, but there can be no lasting peace until naziism and all it stands for in oppression, cruelty and broken faith is banished from the earth. This is an issue that admits of no compromise."

The following day at a meeting in France of the supreme Franco-British war council the two countries pledged themselves anew to "consecrate all their forces and all their resources" to aid Poland.

The issue is thus joined. The Fuehrer may have anticipated, as Mr. Eden believes, that "a quick victory in Poland will be followed by indifference or a capitulation of the western democracies." London's reply to that assumption is that the Allies will fight on to "rid the world of Hitlerism and all that Hitlerism implies." Great Britain may have hesitated in the past to take up the challenge of the Third Reich. She sought peace by every honorable means. She gave Hitler every opportunity to demonstrate his good faith. Instead, he violated his pledges with cynical indifference and embarked on a war of naked aggression. But, instead of a quick war with Poland, he now faces a long struggle with the might of the British Empire and of France arrayed against him. And the ultimate outcome is likely to be far different and far less pleasant than his calculations have led him to assume.

Reserve Officers

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post of August 22 contained a letter entitled "Training of Reserve Officers," written by Mr. E. M. Smith.

I read this article with a great deal of interest, and note, especially the statement that the War Department is doing little to recruit, train and otherwise prepare men for an emergency, aside from the R. O. T. C. and the air service. It appears from this statement that Mr. Smith is not fully acquainted with the work that is being done by the War Department in preparation for an emergency.

In fairness to those regular officers who have given so freely of their leisure time to provide training for those of us reserve officers who are willing to participate, I would like to extend to Mr. Smith an invitation to visit the War Department and see for himself just what is being done, in so far as the limits of the appropriations made by Congress will allow. He might also see records to prove that an active reserve officer may, without involving unnecessary red tape, be promoted to grades higher than that of captain.

Praising Mr. Pegler

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a regular subscriber to your paper I would like to say a word of praise to Mr. Pegler on his column under the heading, "Foul Flirtation." At this time I think it should be published in every newspaper in the country.

The light seems to be breaking through at last and both the press and radio are telling the American people the serious danger that is threatening our country and the peace of the whole world. A few brave patriots have tried in vain to enlighten many prominent people, but without success. It has taken the signed agreement between Stalin and Hitler to open their eyes and thousands of others.

Let's hope every true American, regardless of creed, race or political differences will stand shoulder to shoulder and crush these pernicious enemies before they crush us and take control of the whole civilized world. K. T. M. C.

The Police Probe

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was my understanding that an investigation of conditions in the Washington Police Court and also in the Police Department was being conducted by the Department of Justice, with G-men handling it. There was considerable mention of the subject in the papers for a while, but I see no more regarding it lately. Why?

I certainly hope that the investigation has not been soft-pedaled. There is a strong suspicion among a lot of citizens of this city that, bad as Kansas City and New Orleans have been, there is also ample reason for a probe by the FBI right here in the District of Columbia. It would redound greatly to the credit of Attorney General Murphy and his department if they would plunge fearlessly into the situation in Washington and punish the offenders without fear or favor. It would show that local officials are not immune just because they happen to be in the National Capital.

There should be a genuine cleanup here, and Mr. Murphy's department can do some valiant work in the key city of the country if it wants to. Washington should have a model police system, model penal institutions, a superior type of men on its police force, a policy of absolute impartiality to rich and poor alike, and standards in general that are above those of other cities. It has none of these things. On the contrary, it has some deplorable civic conditions that put it on a level below many other cities of similar size. By all means, let these conditions be ended

Hatch Act Fantasy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that Congress has gone home, and since the Department of Justice appears none too anxious to stick its neck out in various interpretations of the Hatch act, it appears safe for a Young Democrat to get a few things off his chest about this piece of legislation.

Without doubt it is one of the biggest pieces of foolishness ever contained in a Congressional act. It has lately been proposed to make the Hatch act apply to State officials who receive part of their salary from the Federal Government. Let's suppose that that is actually done. It should be done if the Hatch act is to remain a law.

All officials employed by State highway commissions would then be affected by the Hatch act, and it should certainly include all of the contractors who build roads because they get part of their pay from the Federal Government. Then it should be extended to include all laborers who work for the contractors, and the people who manufacture or sell road equipment and material such as iron, steel, gravel, cement, nails, etc., because part of the money that they receive comes from the Federal Government.

Then also the Hatch act should be extended to include all farmers who get a subsidy from the Federal Government, and every person who receives a Federal pension. It should also be amended so as to include all of the people working for national banks, because national banks owe their very existence to the Federal Government.

Finally the Hatch bill should be amended so as to include everybody who receives benefits from a high protective tariff, because these benefits constitute money just as much as money received by a Federal employe. Now, if the Hatch act is amended along these suggested lines, and most surely it ought to be thus amended, if we want to be just and fair to everybody, who will be left to attend the National Convention? ROGER ASHLEY.

Views On Neutrality

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Great forest fires have been raging in our Northwestern States. Across the line lies Canada, which also has vast forests. But with our fires a hundred or more miles below the line Canada might feel perfectly safe, and be content merely to read about our loss feeling it to be utterly needless to help our fire fighters. But let a strong northwest wind spring up and Canada's dry forests might soon be ablaze.

Had we needed fire-fighting equipment that Canada had refused to sell us, our neighbors across the line would have seen that the best way to save their own forests would have been to help us in our extremity.

By a perfectly fair business proposition we can say to every nation in the world: "Our markets are open to you for anything we have to sell. Some things, however, we will sell only for cash, and only to those who can come and get them (cash and carry). That is, if any countries are landlocked or otherwise prevented from coming, that is not our fault. It may be only their misfortune.

"They may have started the fire in spite of the most earnest appeals of all their exposed neighbors. And we certainly have no intention of refusing to sell equipment to those who are fighting to quench the fire, simply because the arson fiends can't take advantage of our impartial offers."

Our country happens to be in a position in which we are forced to help either Germany and Japan by not selling to England and France, or else to help these latter countries simply by selling war supplies only on the cash-and-carry plan. We are no more responsible for Germany's inferior fleet then we are for the immense superiority of its army to England's. So here is one citizen who most devoutly hopes that our President will soon call Congress in special session to repeal the unfair embargo. FAIR PLAY.

Washington, Sept. 8.

To The Editor of The Post—Sir: Strong forces and personalities in commanding positions in the financial and political fields are exerting their influences to the end that this country join the British Empire and France in their struggle for power politics and the status quo. Most of these interests are activated by motives which are detrimental to American democracy and institutions. Their high-pressure propaganda is deceiving honest and patriotic Americans.

Through the media of radio, the newspapers, and organizations' meetings these propagandists are trying just now to repeal the neutrality law and substitute it with a so-called "cash-and-carry" act. If they are successful in these endeavors, their next efforts will be aimed to secure legislation to extend credits to the allies (who are bankrupt and have no gold to carry on the war for long), despite the Johnson law and the sad experience of England's and France's refusal to pay the billions of dollars loaned to them during the previous World War.

The final step and aim will materialize immediately thereafter—to force this country to join the allies in active warfare in the battlefields of Europe. A link of the propaganda set-up is constituted by innumerable biased and highly imaginative so-called news commentators.

A. M. MENDEZ.

New York City, Sept. 8.

To The Editor of The Post—Sir: On the subject of war much has been made—much more evidently than Washington intended of the quotation attributed to him, advising against "entangling alliances." It was not Washington but Jefferson who thus expressed it.

Washington, in discussing the importance of a young Commonwealth building up and developing into a strong Nation before making permanent political treaties with foreign and distant peoples, used the word "entanglement." In the same connection, however, he approved armament for defense and "temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies."

What Washington did say of war was, "nothing short of self-respect and that justice which is essential to a national character ought to involve us in war." He also declared "there is an evil worse than war and that is the debasement of peoples. The wounds of war may be healed but moral degradation leads nations to the tomb."

On Disciplining Parents

I KNOW of no task more delicate, calling for more diplomacy (not to say tact and daintiness of approach), than the disciplining of one's immediate forbears. This becomes a doubly tough chore when at least one of the parents is large and strong and the other, possessed of feminine intuition; in other words, when one is one's father and the other is one's mother. Nothing is more embarrassing or—in some instances—more painful, than to be discovered in the deliberate act of disciplining one's parents.

This was especially true before we reached the present lax era, in which parents do not strike their children except in self-defense, and perhaps not even then. The laxity, I rise to remark, is on both sides. I know children who have parents having in them the makings of fine ancestors, but who are well nigh total flops, as Henry James used to say, because of their offsprings' neglect and leniency.

Old-time parents knew by heart two verses in the Bible: "Children obey your parents"; and "Honor thy father and thy mother." They had not yet learned—and it came to them later with all the jarring impact of a smack in the face—that the remainder of the Good Book is devoted to an attempt to make parents smart enough to give intelligent orders and important enough to be honored. Modern children stand close to their parents; inspect them with X-ray eyes and read the entire table of contents, if any.

My father was a big, incredibly strong man with red whiskers. He didn't talk much, but when he issued a word it had the bark on it. He generally completely concealed a foolishly kind heart with the kind of gruffiness that was paternally en regle in those days. His hands, from contact with plow handles, fork helves and such other bijouterie, were heavily calloused. One did not argue with him. One did it or else. In the process of proving this I indulged in a good many meals from the mantelpiece. So when it became necessary—as it sometimes did—to discipline him, the greatest of care in operation—as well as the greatest courage—were called for.

One time when my beloved male parent had been getting more uppity than it seemed to me his job called for; when he had been springing the good old arbitrary "because I said so" too often as his reason for my doing what he said to do, I saw that steps had to be taken. So I took a deep breath and gave myself over to the job unreservedly. I planned and rejected and replanned and re-rejected until it seemed to me I had a foolproof scheme—"the perfect crime."

One of my father's weaknesses was "Let me do it," if the job held any swank or importance whatever or required any acumen or was any fun. One of us boys could never be trusted to use a man's common sense, even after we were fully grown. We resented this.

Well, to get on with it: I took down our old muzzle-loading shotgun—made by boring the rifles out of an old Civil War (pardon me; the War Between the States) musket. I knew the rhyme "Ram your powder, not your lead, if you'd be sure to kill dead." I reversed the process. I poured in two charges of powder and didn't ram it. On top of this I pushed down a lot of paper wadding. I didn't ram that. Then on top of it all I put a double charge of No. 2 shot, which I rammed and rammed until the steel ramrod bounced clear out of the muzzle. After carefully selecting a good cap and looking to the priming, I hung the gun tenderly on the leathern straps over the kitchen door. I say "tenderly" advisedly. That is a weighed word. I wouldn't have shot that gun off for a henhouse full of radium. Step No. 1.

During our noonday "dinner" in the kitchen almost under that gun, I arose quickly, went to the front parlor window, looked out, and came back to reach silently up for the gun. This was the delicate part. I wouldn't have taken it down for anything, but I reached for it as if I meant it. Pap said:

"Whatcha goin' t' do?"

"Shoot those crows that are stealing eggs, down by the fence." Our hens "stole their nests out" in strange places in those days.

"I'll do it," he said, as he arose from the table. (That was Step No. 2, and it was working.)

"No," I said, "go on and eat your dinner, Pap. I'll do it."

"Gimme that gun!" It was the tone in which his ultimata were issued.

I gave him the gun, grumbling as much as I dared. He went out the front door and I wasn't feeling so good. After all, he was the only father I had and I knew he was in for a jolt of major dimensions. I pretended to go back to my dinner; instead I stood at the parlor window peering past a shade.

He walked into the tall timothy, stealthily. He raised the gun and leveled it at a sassy crow on a fence stake. I shuddered.

There was a burst of sound approximating the boy-oh-where-was-the explosion in Casablanca. The air was crowded with smoke. As it cleared away I saw the only father I had to my name arising from the timothy. He was disheveled but intact. I breathed a sigh of relief and went back to the table—not hungry, as you may guess; but my jaws were working vigorously when my father came in and hung up the gun. I didn't look at him.

He was silent for a few minutes. Then he asked:

"Who loaded that gun?"

"I did," I said quickly. "Why?"

He didn't answer. I had offered to shoot that gun off, myself, so I had an air-tight defense.

He knew as well as he knew his own name and mine what had happened. But what comeback had he?

He never mentioned it again until he was an old, old man. And when we started to talk it over, he grinned broadly and said: "That'll be enough of that."

He was a good egg; Pop was.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

No Longer A Joke

THE FATE of the Austrians, Czechs and Poles, betrayed by Nazi conspirators in their midst, proves that the anti-American bund, operating flagrantly in the United States under the protection of American laws and the tolerant feelings of a free people, is no longer a joke or a mild irritant. This bund is a dangerous conspiracy which one day might result in internal disorders, sabotage, the dynamiting of bridges and reservoirs and the betrayal of decent Americans to firing squads of Nazi agents. Already this Nazi organization has been connected with the theft of American military secrets, and on all sides there is evidence of its campaign to create hatred between elements of American people who lived in harmony until that time, about three years ago, when one of Hitler's controlled newspapers threatened to take an interest in our internal affairs which would not be pleasant.

Since that time the anti-American bund has boldly moved into American domestic politics, and its leaders arise in meetings of foreign conspirators and native fellow travelers to insult not only the President, personally, but the office which he holds and the Nation which elected him.

Same Camouflage As Used Before

THE ANTI-AMERICAN bund professes to be an American organization, and its fuehrer holds naturalization papers, but that camouflage is the same that was used in Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland. It likewise includes a certain number of native traitors to impart a phony American character in an alien conspiracy. This also was true in Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland.

Czecho-Slovakia contained an element of people of German blood who lived in a border district that never was German and who never had been German citizens themselves. Under a leader appointed by Hitler they began a campaign of terrorism against their Czech neighbors. They took every legal advantage of their Czech citizenship, demanded representation in the government and local administration and at the same time marched under the Nazi swastika, hailed Hitler and openly advocated the conquest of their country by the Nazis.

Many of them were agents of the German Gestapo, or secret police, and these spies were the agents through whom the rank-and-file members of the plot cleared through to Berlin information regarding the attitude of individual patriotic Czechs. When the Nazis swept in, the secret police rounded up decent Czechs, pointed out to them by the undercover agents who used the liberties of their technical Czech citizenship to destroy the country.

Polish Patriots Face Excecution

LAST SATURDAY it was revealed that civilian Poles, most of them patriotic young fellows similar to the average young American, were being rounded up in batches and led off to face Nazi firing squads in their own country under the escort of armed agents of the German police. These Polish patriots had been turned up, or fingered, as our gangsters have taught us to say, by German-Poles who lived among them as neighbors.

The German-Poles were spies, keeping records of the grudges which developed in the friction-created Polish nation. The Poles knew they were traitors all the time, so there is no reason to doubt that they did bear down on them now and again. What people wouldn't show a little resentment against agents of a foreign enemy except the Americans who will stand for anything?

The Nazi secret police were not bothering with elaborate trials of these patriotic Poles. They didn't bother to conduct fair trials of their own in their own country, so it is idle to think that they might be any less savage with members of a breed which they hold to be inferior.

Bund Members Here Declared Traitors

THIS IS PAYDAY for the Nazi conspirators in Poland. Every Nazi who owes money to a Pole, every Nazi who tried to swindle a Pole and was caught at it, every Nazi living in Poland who violated Polish laws for the safety of the state and was punished for it will now file an information with the Gestapo, accusing his enemies of sniping German soldiers and civilians or oppressing Nazi Poles before the "liberation," and young Poles will be slaughtered in masses for their revenge and for the glory of Adolf Hitler.

The anti-American bund is precisely the same kind of organization in this country, and the sooner the Americans decide that their democratic tolerance does not run for traitors and treason, the less damage the bund will be able to report to Hitler.

Veterans to Mark Constitution Day

More than 4,000,000 members of the National Association of Regulars, veterans of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, will participate in the celebration of Constitution Day Sunday, J. A. Poirier, national commander, announced yesterday.

The association is carrying on an educational campaign to emphasize the importance of the Constitution to combat subversive influences attacking the American form of government.

Post War Coverage Praised

Policy Committee: "The interpretation of European events by The Post's columnists has been invaluable to those trying to understand what is happening in the world today. The New York Times War Service splendidly supplements The Post's excellent coverage of the European situation."

Miss Elisabeth Snyder, secretary, Health Security Administration—"I think it's pretty grand to get such complete coverage in one newspaper. Different points of view are what people want and this especially true in the present emergency. This war is being regarded more intelligently than the last one. I read three Washington newspapers every day and I find The Post war coverage is best."

Leon Henderson, member of the Securities and Exchange Commission—"I think getting the New York Times War News Service is a master stroke. Public interest is at a high point in war news, and it is vitally important that this news be authentic and without propaganda. The Times service comes closest to furnishing this type of dispatches. As a long-time reader of Gedye and Mathews, as well as The Post, I welcome the union."

William Phillips, sightless keeper of the General Accounting Office newsstand—"The Post has sold out early every day this week. Undoubtedly the addition of the New York Times War News Service has had a lot to do with this. Oh, yes, I follow the European news closely, too. I have my radio earphone right here and when I leave home in the morning someone reads the latest news to me."

PHILLIPS

Charles B. Dulcan, general manager and vice president, The Hecht Co.—"The new service is an excellent addition to an already great newspaper."

Rev. Abernethy

Frank B. McNinch, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission—"I consider the New York Times War News Service a very important addition to other news sources of The Post. It affords Washington a very complete coverage of the situation abroad."

Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, largest Protestant congregation here—"I'm delighted to know that The Post is to have this additional feature. It is a remarkable step that every local citizen should appreciate.

The Rev. Charles B. Austin, pastor of West Washington Baptist Church and president of the District Baptist Convention—"I feel that The Post is rendering a remarkable service to the Washington public in the addition of the thorough, accurate and impartial New York Times service. It is a big step forward."

Commander T. A. M. Craven, member of the Federal Communications Commission: "Speaking as a private citizen and Post subscriber, I think the addition of the Times service is a fine thing. I look for The Post eagerly every morning."

BURKE

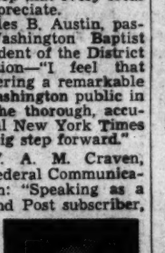
Vincent Burke, District postmaster: "I am very familiar with the New York Times service. It is a splendid addition to Post coverage of foreign events. Washington should feel very fortunate."

C. Rogers Arundel, chairman, Board of Tax Appeals: "I read the New York Times frequently and think The Post is providing a splended service."

Sefton Darr, president of the District Bar Association: "I think the addition of the New York Times service to The Post's excellent war news coverage is a wonderful thing. I have found The Post's coverage complete and reliable. The special features and columns have been equally interesting."

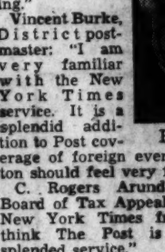
DARR

Leo J. Bittner, Office of National Parks: "I read all the local papers, but The Post has what it takes with regard to war coverage, especially now that it carries the stories of New York Times correspondents. A liberal number of reporters and news interpreters is what I, for one, like, because I'm fond of making comparisons and sort of playing the views of one writer against another."



BITTNER

Henry M. Voss, executive, Lansburgh's—"I like The Post so much it's the only one I read seven days a week. It is doing a swell job on the European situation. The Times service has made a good job even better."



DR. DAUER

Dr. C. C. Dauer, epidemiologist, District Health Department—"I like The Post's augmented war coverage very much. I follow it closely every day. To have the New York Times' correspondents writing for The Post is a fine convenience."

Dr. John R. Edwards, pastor of Union Methodist Church, and for many years on the Foreign Mission Board of the Methodist Church: "The acquisition of the New York Times service is a great advance for The Post, and it deserves commendation. The Post is now giving Washington absolutely the best that can be had."

Censorship On Information Likened To Air-Raid Blackouts

By P. J. Philip

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Sept. 12.—That an Allied Supreme War Council has been created and that as a member of that council Prime Minister Chamberlain today visited France for its first meeting, was announced this evening in one of the most uninspired and least inspiring communiques ever written. That communique read textually:

"A meeting of the supreme council.

"The office of the French premier communicates:

"A meeting of the supreme council took place today on French territory.

"There were present for Great Britain Mr. Chamberlain, the prime minister, and Lord Chatfield, minister for co-ordination of defense; for France, Edouard Daladier, president of the council, minister of national defense and of war, and Gen. Gamelin, commander in chief, chief of the general staff of national defense.

"This meeting completely confirmed the firm resolution of France and Great Britain to consecrate all their force and all their resources to facing a conflict which has been imposed on them. They are decided to give to Poland, which is resisting with so much bravery the brutal invasion of her territory, all assistance in their power."

Of the 53 words in the French version in the first paragraph of this communique, 31 are concerned with the titles of the four men engaged in the conference, while the second paragraph cannot by any stretch of imagination be construed as telling millions of people now engaged directly or indirectly in this war anything they didn't know.

The whereabouts of the meeting is carefully concealed although everybody in Paris knew by 7 o'clock this evening where it had been held. And just in case anybody should seek to convert the stilted language of this message to the world into something readable and human, orders have been given that what it contains should not be embroidered or enlarged.

IT WOULD SEEM that the dimmed light habit is to be applied to communication as well as to street lamps and dwelling houses.

On the other hand the French radio this evening announced just after this important communique had been read out that a Basle newspaper had published a message from Riga telling about the way trolley cars and auto buses had been used for barricades in the defense of Warsaw.

Undoubtedly this communique, issued by the premier's office concerning the doings of the supreme council, is intended to inspire all those millions who must sit still and wait with confidence that France and Great Britain are working hand-in-hand. It is intended to convey that the governments as well as the people whom these governments represent are united and solid in their determination to protect Poland and put an end to Hitlerian aggression.

Where it falls short is that, as read over the radio, as it will be permitted to be printed in the newspapers, it has taken no account of either the intelligence or the emotion of these millions of people.

It is as if Nelson's order at Trafalgar had read "those in authority in your country expect all ranks today to do within their respective spheres whatever duties may fall to them."

The average Frenchman's and Englishman's reaction will undoubtedly be that at a time when they have left their homes and their work and they are facing death the least the prime ministers can do is to fulfill to the uttermost their ability these resolutions which they have framed in such mild terms.

A LATER COMMUNIQUE from the premier's office stated that Premier Daladier left Rue Saint Dominique this morning near 10 o'clock and returned at 6:05 p. m. It would, however, probably be considered an unjustified assumption to say that in that time and at the place which could be reached within that time, he met Chamberlain and the other two members of this important council.

What is recorded is that on his return he received Edouard Herriot but again that meeting must not in any way be linked with the possibility of anything resembling any cabinet changes. What was intended to be explanatory and an entirely sympathetic account by this writer of what might happen in that matter and why, last night was utterly and absolutely suppressed by the censor.

At the same time news that British troops were being cheered and welcomed in French villages was suppressed in France and in messages to the United States.

In its way that other news might have been considered as heartening as today's communique about this first meeting of the Supreme Council. It was at least evidence that there is something behind that "resolution of the heads of the two governments and their fellow members in the Supreme Council." It is presumed of course that the two premiers and the other members of the Supreme Council discussed and decided a great deal more than is told in the communique of which results will be seen later.

In the first place their meeting was in some sense a reply to Marshal Goering's insinuation that there were differences of outlook between the two governments and that different tactics should be employed toward the two people. Nothing is more obvious than that harmony and unity which exists between the two countries engaged in a war against Hitlerian aggression.

That the communique regarding the meeting is very much in the nature of understatement is perhaps only in accord with the characters of the two premiers who both dislike anything that savors of display or exaggeration.

"Checking out, Sir?"

'Unneutral' Neutrality

By Ernest K. Lindley

More Than One Kind

THE ADMINISTRATION'S argument that the arms embargo is "unneutral" seems to be the most specious than can be made against the embargo.

The embargo, it is true, prevents the nations which have the cash from buying arms, ammunition and implements of war in the United States. It is therefore to their disadvantage. But lifting the embargo is clearly to the disadvantage of Germany. If the embargo is "unneutral" to one side, lifting it is "unneutral" to the other.

Neutrality is non-participation in a war. The steps taken by a neutral to avoid participation in a war almost invariably affect the various belligerents unevenly. The only impartiality required of a neutral is impartiality in the enforcement of the laws and regulations which he applies for the purpose of avoiding participation in the war.

It would be unneutral to embargo the export of arms to Japan while permitting their export to China.

On the other hand, there is no obligation on the part of a neutral to manufacture or export arms, ammunition and implements of war. In fact, there is ample precedent for refusing to do so. During the Franco-Prussian war, both Belgium and Switzerland placed an embargo on munitions of war. During the Spanish-American War, the Netherlands applied a similar embargo. During the Russo-Japanese War of 1904-1905, Sweden did the same thing. We did it during the Italo-Ethiopian War and during the recent war in Spain. In the case of Spain, it was the Administration—not the isolationists—who demanded the arms embargo on the ground on that it would prevent our involvement in war. It was to the clear disadvantage of the loyalists, but the President and the State Department did not call it "unneutral."

Opposed Embargo As Matter Of Policy

THREE YEARS AGO Dr. Edwin Borchard, a recognized authority on international law, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that "arms, ammunition and implements of war may be embargoed by a neutral to belligerents under the time-honored rights of neutrality." Dr. Borchard's testimony on this point was especially impressive because he was opposed to the arms embargo as a matter of policy.

At those same hearings, our State Department was advocating not only an arms embargo but a limitation on the export of other essentials of war, such as copper, oil, etc. This further limitation was to be put into effect at the discretion of the President, and he was to be given the power to list the specific commodities to which it applied. Mr. Green H. Hackworth, who was then and still is legal adviser to our State Department, argued that this proposal was entirely "neutral."

"It has been said here if we exercise discretion, we become unneutral," Mr. Hackworth said. "Why? Because our action will not apply equally. But nonaction will have the same effect . . . nor can you be charged with unneutrality for taking action, if your action is made to apply equally to all belligerents. That is the criterion with respect to neutrality . . . that whatever action shall be taken shall apply equally to all belligerents."

Thus three years ago the Administration was insisting that it was neutral not only to embargo arms, ammunition and implements of war, but to empower the President to restrict the export of other commodities—the commodities to be selected at his discretion and and at any time after a war began.

Within Our Rights To Sell All We Can

THEN THE STATE Department proposed that the export of these other essentials of war be limited to the normal peacetime amounts. That was a fair proposal. Legally the belligerent nations are not entitled to buy anything from us. They would have no ground for complaint that we were being unfair if we limited our exports to them of any and all commodities to, let us say, the average for a five-year period preceding the war.

On the other hand, it is unquestionably within our rights as a neutral to sell all we can to the belligerents. It is within our rights to require them to come and get in their own ships. Or it is within our rights to take it to them—or try to—in our ships.

The arms embargo is entirely neutral. Lifting the embargo would also be entirely neutral. The question is which kind of neutrality best serves our purposes—the most important of which is to avoid being drawn into a war in which we have no supreme national interest.

The Athenia Alibi

MR. FRITZ KUHN, the pain in the neck of German-Americans, the cause of rage to some and of laughter for most, has come out from the shadow cast upon him by a heartless indictment for embezzlement to give his version of the sinking of the Athenia.

It seems, according to Mr. Kuhn, that "the Athenia was sunk at the orders of the First Lord of the British Admiralty Winston Churchill, in absolute disregard of American lives instrusted to British ships" and for the purpose of getting this country into the war.

This statement of Mr. Kuhn's reveals as well as anything what the whole war is about. It is whether Europe shall be governed by a mentality akin to Winston Churchill's or whether it shall be governed by a mentality akin to that of Mr. Kuhn, who is a faithful reflection of the men whom he serves.

None So Forthright As Mr. Churchill

MR. KUHN believes that he can lay the Athenia on Winston Churchill's doorstep, because Mr. Kuhn is totally incapable of understanding Mr. Churchill. He is totally incapable of understanding a patriot who is generous, a spirit that is chivalrous, an aristocratic spirit with only one grand passion—the honor of England. Mr. Churchill believes with almost religious intensity that the English spirit in its finest manifestations is the world's greatest hope for decency and freedom, and among all Englishmen none is more forthright, downright and outright than Mr. Churchill.

He has often been erratic; he is ornery; he is impossible to lead; he breaks the disciplines of party lines. He is so brilliant that the English, who, by and large, distrust brilliance, are afraid of him—in time of peace.

Mr. Churchill, too, believes in the leadership principle. He is a doubtful democrat; his spirit is Aristotelian; he believes in aristocratic government on the wide basis of popular consent, and he would define an aristocrat as a man who is willing to take upon himself, with no thought of fame or gain, the responsibilities which the weaker shun. He believes that leadership cannot and should not be forced. It must accrue to a man on the strength of his record. He must not usurp responsibility—the usurpation of power is gangsterism, in Mr. Churchill's mind.

His Warning Voice Raised for Decade

MR. CHURCHILL, the maverick, was out of office for years. He is back as first lord of the admiralty because from his seat in the House of Commons—one little seat among 615—he has for a decade been a warning voice denouncing England for her muddleheadedness, her intellectual sloppiness, her unwillingness to accept the responsibility of leading Western civilization out of the dark dungeons of violence, oppression, mendacity and persecution, in which so much of it has languished for so long.

Mr. Churchill is first lord of the admiralty because he has been right in every warning and every prediction, and because he has been right on the highest possible level.

And Mr. Churchill did not order the torpedoing of the Athenia, because Mr. Churchill is utterly incapable of doing such a thing. The witness for Mr. Churchill is his nature and his character.

No such witness can testify for the Nazis. The Athenia was torpedoed. Mr. Kuhn says "It would be idiotic for Germany to have undertaken this sinking." It is indeed idiotic from the viewpoint of a Western mind. And it is possible that the commander of the submarine that torpedoed the vessel was young and overzealous. It is possible that it was all a mistake. But it is not impossible that the Athenia was deliberately sunk by the Nazis for reasons that, in their peculiarly warped mentalities, are not idiotic at all.

Reichstag Burning Just Another Example

THE REGIME which has now become a world menace came into power by burning down the German Reichstag and laying the blame on the Communists. This action would seem idiotic, even with Hitler as chancellor, even with the police services in Nazi hands, even with a million or more party troops all ordered to support the theory. The Nazis found it impossible to frame any other political group to the satisfaction of a German court.

But they attempted to frame not only the Communists but all the Democrats, and then succeeded before the case came to trial in panicking the country into the election in which Hitler got his first majority.

And without question the burning of the Reichstag was undertaken as a test to see how much they could get away with—what the reaction of the German people would be.

The Nazi mentality is the mentality of the underworld. From the beginning they have used the come-on, the frame-up and the bump-off as instruments of national policy. Roehm was framed when Hitler wanted to get rid of him, and then bumped off. The come-on was used with Dr. Schuschnigg, with Dr. Benes and with Mr. Chamberlain. All were betrayed with jovial laughter for poor saps. Munich was a test of what the Nazis could get away with. The cunning, criminal and limited Nazi mind was certain that after Munich everything was plain sailing. The mere fact that Hitler believed he could go on making promises, and breaking them indefinitely, shows a total lack of comprehension of the civilized man, who is slow to believe his own ears when listening to truly Gargantuan lies.

Athenia Sinking Seen As Cold-Blooded Test

ALL THE EVIDENCE of the past indicates that the Nazis may have torpedoed the Athenia in cold and criminal calculation—first, as a test, at the very outbreak of the war of what American opinion may be. They would argue thus: the outstanding atrocity of the last war, the act which most outraged Americans, was the sinking of the Lusitania.

Therefore, they would argue, let us immediately repeat the Lusitania case in even more heartless and outrageous form. Let us attack a westbound ship carrying no cargo for the Allies and bearing Americans home from the war zone.

The act will apparently be so senseless that we can easily deny it. We will lay the blame on the British and claim that the British are trying to drag America into the war. At the same time we can see what the reaction is. If America does nothing we can write her off as a serious factor to be reckoned with. If she does nothing, that fact alone will have a bad effect on the morale of the Allies.

The Nazi Mind Works Strangely

This interpretation crossed my mind the moment the seemingly idiotic deed was committed, for the Nazi mind has been for me for years a fascinating, though gruesome, study. The Nazis are not only capable of thinking like this; in fact, it is the only way they do think—with a perverted, circumspect, shrewd, bold and treacherous calculation.

And now Mr. Kuhn obligingly rushes out to support my theory. Winston Churchill thought it up! His is the evil mind which is perverted, circumspect, shrewd, and boldly treacherous.

Go on, Mr. Kuhn! Go on! The more you talk the better pleased we shall be.

Europe Needs A CzechoSlovakia, Credit Men Told

An independent Czecho-Slovakia is indispensable to stability in central Europe, Dr. Charles Pergler, former Czech diplomat, declared yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the Associated Retail Credit Men.

A Czech legion of 25,000 is now fighting beside the Polish army, he said, and another legion is in formation for service on the Western Front.

Strategy behind the British propaganda raids over Germany is based on "wishful thinking," Dr. Pergler said. "It is no use pretending that Hitler does not have a large measure of public support within Germany."

More than 100 association members attended the meeting, held at the Woodward and Lothrop restaurant.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Child Victim

Sleep, Margaret . . .
And may sweet dreams displace
The black nightmare which a better world
Would have spared a child!

There is a smile on your face, Margaret,
It must have come as the horror
Of memory faded, blacking out
The frightful night at sea and restored
The sweet fancies of childhood.

It must have come as every frightful
Recollection of sound and fury,
Of shot, explosion and flame,
Of screams in the darkness,
Of pain and delirium was "blacked out"
To give way to a burst of golden sunlight.
Bringing back a world of innocence—
A world of laughter and music,
A world of romping children, open fields,
Rippling brooks, village greens, and
Merry school yards at recess hour.

It must have come, Margaret,
When the memory of crashing timbers,
Hissing shell and of figures running
In the twilight vanished,
To give way to pictures of home,
Green pastures, smiling playmates,
Kindly grownups, toys, dolls
And birthday parties.

Sleep, Margaret . . .
You are out of it now . . .
You had heard people talking
Of a war somewhere, but it seemed
So unreal and so incredible . . .

You might have seen much more of it . . .
You might have lived to know

The Neutral

America's a funny place—
While Mars in other lands holds sway,
It asks, "Who won the seventh race?"
Or, "Say, who's on the mound today?"

In Europe death sweeps all before:
Great fields are bloody, charred and flat,
Yet here we ask, "Say, whatsa score?"
And cry, "Hey, lissen; who's at bat?"

Ima Dodo is back in the stock market and says she gets a straight inside tip that when Radio gets to 300 they are going to split it up.

Then there is the timid soul who wants to know if he can keep neutral in accordance with the President's wishes and still order an occasional seidel of pilsener.

Encomium On A Cricket

'Tis the summer's last cricket
Still chirping away;
Alone in the thicket,
Yet gallantly gay,

Oh, applaud him with me,
As he laughs at regret.
The frosts soon to be
Haven't gotten him yet.

I admire each "cheep,"
Showing laudable zest.
(But I would like some sleep,
For he is quite a pest!)

Cynic

The drums they beat, the trumpets sound,
The nations march like geese;
There's death and carnage all around—
Because we're seeking peace!

The bombs come hurtling from the air
As littered towns increase;
And troops surge on from everywhere—
To bring a world to peace!

Munitions plants are going strong,
The shops extend the lease;
Say, can it be that I am wrong—
The world is seeking peace?

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York Building Information Bureau Near Grand Central

New York, Sept. 12.

THERE ARE GREAT doings at the Forty-second street foot of Murray Hill, where I live in a manner of speaking. Under the ramp which carries Park avenue traffic around the New York Central Building, and where the stern bronze replica of old Commodore Vanderbilt, who started the whole thing, is erected, there has been great pounding the past few weeks. An unusual building is in process there.

It is to be the first municipal information bureau in our town, and since it lies directly across the street from the frantic Grand Central Terminal, it will no doubt be a lot of help to many people. Gentlemanly and ladylike attendants will answer every question a visitor will want to know—and believe me, these are wide in scope, and cover a lot of territory. For instance, the place has been hunting for a good church guide, for hundreds of people come to town wanting detailed information on various houses of worship. Then, of course, there will be an art expert, who will have facts about all the city's museums and galleries at the very tip of his little tongue.

The building will be of great use, and it will also ornament from now on a spot which has been the hangout of loiterers, petty peddlers and crackpot speechmakers, competing lustily with the Forty-second street roar. The place is being built largely of transhucent glass brick, which will make it light inside. With its roof the ramp, and its foundation the street, its cost will be amazingly low, and even this will be self-paying, for both space in the interior is being rented to leading business houses of the village, strictly for publicity purposes. All in all, our neighborhood is getting a very nice new building.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—On the same ship with Sonja Henie was her business agent, a 10-percenter named Victor Orsatti. People are doing their best to marry the skating minx to Mr. Orsatti, but she denies it with true Hollywood fervor. "We're good friends," says the lady of silver blades, "but we're not engaged. There's not even a romance." That seems to settle that matter. Remember how the press agents tried to sock over a Henie romance with Tyrone Power?

Mary Haworth's Mail

Does Bride Wear Gloves With Suit, for Morning Church Wedding? Are Place Cards Used at Breakfast?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am to be married soon and I find myself woefully ignorant concerning details of etiquette. There are a few things I would like you to clarify for me. I am to be married in a suit, at a 9 o'clock mass. I know it is correct to wear gloves, but when? I am having a wedding breakfast at a local restaurant and I would like to know if I should have place cards. Also, if it would be all right to have a wedding cake that early in the morning. I would like very much to have one.

WORKING GIRL.

DEAR WORKING GIRL: Girls were taught, in bygone years, that no lady appeared on the street unless her hands were clad in gloves. It was considered bad form for her to emerge upon her front doorstep, even, while in the act of drawing on her gloves. In some quarters, there is still a faithful hangover observance of this stilted decree. But other worldly wise persons believe that really good dress, nowadays, is that which is functional—in the sense of serving comfort and purpose. They subscribe to the theory that if gloves are an inconvenience on a given occasion, they may be put aside without apology.

Most stylists would tell you, I think, that gloved hands are a "must" when a suit is worn, particularly when worn as church attire. And since you are to be married in a suit, gloves may seem necessary to complete the picture. However, it is my opinion that you could discard them before approaching the altar to be married. Failing to do this, you have the alternatives of drawing off one glove just before the ring is slipped on your finger; or of seeing to it that the seams of the third-finger casing on the left hand have been ripped, so as to permit the placement of the ring. My advice is to do whatever seems least awkward.

Whether place cards should be used at the wedding breakfast depends on the size of the breakfast company. If there are to be approximately 20 guests, say, seated at two or three tables, place cards would be useful in preventing a milling confusion. If there is to be only one smallish table, seating six, eight or 10 guests, the bride—or her mother, as hostess—might personally guide the seating arrangement. So here again, use common sense. By all means have a wedding cake, if you want one. There is no reason why you shouldn't, and every sentimental reason why you should. M. H.

Girl in Trouble Needs Assistance

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am writing to you on behalf of a girl friend of mine who is in desperate trouble. She lived near me for eight years and I know that she was a good girl. We went together all the time and it was through her that I met my husband. About six months ago, she moved away. Somehow, she got into trouble. I have never asked her how it happened, as I knew she didn't care to talk about it.

She has lived with her sister-in-law for nine years, as her mother runs around; never stays home. Her sister-in-law has learned that she is going to have a baby and she wants to put her out. She has no place to go, as her mother won't help her, and never has told her the facts of life. If I had a place for her she certainly would be welcome, as I think an awful lot of her and I want to help her all I can.

I have heard of the Crittenton Home for Girls, but someone tells me they take only girls whose residence is in the District of Columbia. Is this true? I have read your column and I know that you have helped other girls in such trouble. I hope you can help her. Yours truly,

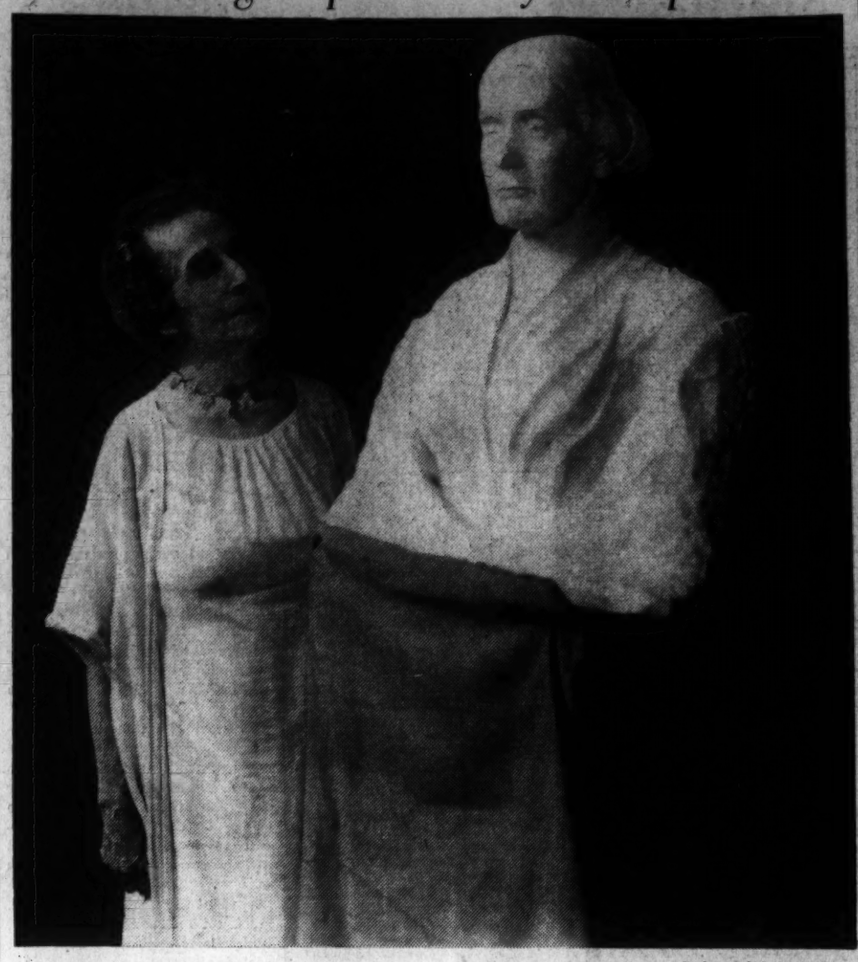
MARYLAND READER.

Crittenton Home Ready to Help

DEAR M. R.: The Florence Crittenton Home, located at 4759 Reservoir road northwest, serves a "greater metropolitan area," including Prince Georges and Montgomery counties, on the Maryland side, and Alexandria, Fairfax and Arlington counties, on the Virginia side. This gives reason to hope that your friend may be eligible for admittance. Yet, if she isn't, Miss Anne Rogers, case worker at the Home, can decide in a confidential interview—the proper place for her to go. Miss Rogers may be reached by telephoning EMerson 4300, and she is willing (as she has already assured me) to take the initiative in helping the girl make protective plans. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Suffragist Spells Beauty to Sculptor



Underwood & Underwood.

Advocate of the theory that real beauty comes from within, Mrs. Adelaide Johnson (above), sculptor, reproduced the likeness of Susan B. Anthony in marble. The light of high purpose shines through the finely chiseled features of her subject

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Reducing Fats in Diet Permits Wider Range of Foods

MRS. JACK SPRAT was the original overweight. You remember the sad story of Jack Sprat and his good wife. She ate all the fat and that's the reason she lost her girlish figure. The typical overweight follows this same bad example and eats too many foods which are high in fat. If you honestly believe that you are not a big eater, your weight troubles probably lie in the fact that you are taking too much fat.

Fats masquerade under such delicious guises as mayonnaise, French dressing, meat and gravy, fried foods, nuts and chocolate. And when you stop to think that fat boosts your weight two and one-half times as fast as the other food elements, you have the answer to your weight problem.

Eat Little Fat

How much butter and cream do you use every day? You should have some as a source of Vitamin A, but three pats of butter each 1¼ inches by 1¼ inches by ¾ inch is all that is allowed on a slimming diet. And you can take cream in your breakfast coffee, but no more than 1 tablespoon.

The less fat you have in your diet, the more of the other foods you can have. An average pat of butter ½ inch thick contains as many calories as an average-size baked potato, more calories than a glass of skim milk, and as many as 3 cups of string beans or several heads of lettuce. You wouldn't have to be a big eater to take two pats of butter with every meal—getting 600 calories in fat, practically all headed for the fatty tissues of your body.

If you ever expect to get slim and stay slim, you will have to curtail the fats in your diet. This won't be particularly easy. The fact that fat is hard to digest makes you miss it more.

It remains in the stomach longer than other food elements and staves off the hunger pangs.

Apt to Get Hungry

On a reducing diet you are apt to get hungry between meals and it is a good plan to have a cup of hot bouillon, some fruit or a glass of skim milk in the middle of the morning, and a cup of hot tea with a low calorie wafer again at 4 o'clock. You can even have a lump of sugar with your tea. These extras must, of course, be kept within the 1,200-calorie total if you are to lose between one and two pounds per week.

It's a wise reducer who finds out early in the game that she can reduce much more easily by taking the fats out of the menu. And it's a very wise reducer who realizes that she can have twice as much lean meat for the same number of calories as if she ate the fat. Cut fats to the minimum all along the line: trim every particle of fat from the meat before cooking, if possible. Leave off the gravy. Take clear soups, not cream soups. Skimp on the mayonnaise and French dressing and avoid whipped creams and pastries.

If you are like our hypothetical reducer with 50 pounds to lose, it is imperative that you take most of the fats out of your menus.

Hair Styles Show War Influence

Paris (AP).—Ups and downs in the hair now are as uncertain as fluctuations in the stock markets.

Nobody in Paris looks any more for a final answer to the question: Shall the hair-do be up or down? Individuals are arriving at their own conclusions and acting accordingly.

Patriotism has had an influence on coiffures, though, and dictators' doings have had a certain restraining effect.

High Thinking Produces Beauty That Endures, Says Sculptor

Susan B. Anthony Cited by Adelaide Johnson As Example of How Inspiration and Purpose Can Transfer and Ennoble Features

WOMEN have it within their power to be as beautiful as they choose. No feature is so ugly or misshapen that it cannot be changed. In fact, no ideal of true loveliness is beyond attainment, provided the laws of nature are obeyed. This is the lofty concept of Mrs. Adelaide Johnson, widely known sculptor of 230 Maryland avenue northeast.

Famous for her immortalized creations of many outstanding women leaders, Mrs. Johnson numbers among her best work the marble busts of Susan B. Anthony, Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The busts of these three have been incorporated in the portrait monument that now stands in the crypt room of the Capitol.

"Inspiration and purpose, plus noble thinking, are nature's beautifying tools," said the sculptor. "No plastic surgeon's knife can bring about a greater or more permanent change than the soul itself."

Mind Is a Factor

"The mind," she explained, "acting as an intermediary can adjust and transform features. This is illustrated by the transition that takes place in a woman's features under stress of emotion. Unhappy, a woman's features become dull. When she is in love and is loved in return, her countenance radiates an inner glow that reflects real beauty. And regardless of the shape of the features, a happy person looks beautiful."

Mrs. Johnson also pointed out that inspiration and purpose give distinction and interest to features. Further supporting her theory, she said that often a woman's features seemed to look like her husband's or vice versa. She explained this by saying that a fixed ideal stamps itself indelibly on the features, and that the spirit with its ability to transmute and to change the shape of the features is the real doctor.

Stressing the beauty of the soul, Mrs. Johnson by no means discounts the importance of physical perfection. She says, "the body in its degree as the image of the soul is as important as the soul. To make and to keep the body in good form the laws of nature must be obeyed."

By this she means eating properly, exercising regularly and having the proper mental attitude, also keeping the body in perfect alignment, never allowing any part of it to get out of proportion. "For beauty of form," she explained, "is a matter of proportion."

Keep Muscles Rigid

"Women who wish to keep their bodies firm and beautiful past middle age and into old age," said Mrs. Johnson, "must never let go. They must keep the muscles as rigid as a corset. Sitting and standing they must keep the body in line until the position becomes a normal and involuntary act. The muscles themselves should be their own corset that is lengthened and firm."

Mrs. Johnson cautioned against wearing of heavy chains and beads around the neck. These, she maintains, pull the neck out of line by their weight, roll up fat, and eventually produce the dowager hump. To avoid this heavy pull on the back of the neck she suggests that heavy chains or beads be pinned inside the dress about the middle of each side of the neck.

"What is your feeling about cosmetics, as a beauty aid?" She was asked.

"Cosmetics," she replied, "are all right but not too efficient. For the most part they give the impression of butchers' fingernails (vivid nail polish) and a sword slit (bright lipstick) in the face. Of course, when artistically applied, that's a different story. But few women ever use them adeptly."

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay.

A Woman's Part

I

What can I do? I feel so idle, selfish, and so helpless,
When men are dying and their wives and children face
Privation, anguish, terror; and throughout the world
The barbarous forces of the past are on rampage,
Destroying all that womankind before me had built up
Out of her simple household arts to give the poor world comfort, order, beauty.

II

Oh yes, I can roll bandages, 'tis true, if I am needed,
Or sew or knit or drive, or help raise funds to aid
War's sufferers; but all that is not enough, the greater service
Must be in ways that are not quite so obvious or so easy
In ways of mind and heart, of thought, of feeling, daily action
To help keep clear the tortuous path of man's ascent from out the slime beneath him.

III

It is my part to foster in my own life all the forces
Of calmness, fairness, reason, self-control
As the best antidote to fear, brute force and passion
That rage abroad; for every time that I am calm or sane or just
I strengthen all the cosmic powers of reason and of order
Everywhere, and I do that much to keep the chaos from advancing.

IV

It is my task to disperse more kindness, pity, understanding
In a world in which the icy elements of anger, fear and hate
Are freezing hearts of men, reviving the beast within them,
And it is my job to hold on valiantly to all of grace and beauty
That I can within a world that scorns them but that yet
Has never needed more their healing ministry, their guiding gleam in darkness.

V

It is my part to keep alive the healthful purge of laughter,
To cherish gayety and cheer, the saving grace of humor,
That of all traits alone sets man apart from beast,
And that to the wily savage, grim warrior, bellicose ruler
Is unknown; and I must strengthen joy throughout the world
To tonic saddened men and give them power to meet the hard, hard tasks before them.

V

Yes, this is my commission—that of every other woman,
To hold fast to all the civilizing, transforming forces
Of order, beauty, love, which first dissolved the chaos
Of the universe, then raised us from the primates
And above all to cherish faith in a serene tomorrow when we climb
Into a world of harmony, of freedom from the "blood and iron" threat of the jungle.

Paul McNutt Blushes as Ladies Of Press Are Invited to Feast Eyes

But He Smiles at Ruby Black's Posy Before Cautious Talk

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Paul V. McNutt, Federal security administrator, yesterday revealed an accomplishment he has hitherto seldom displayed in public. He blushes.

Introduced at the opening fall luncheon of the Women's National Press Club as a man "notable for many things, one of which you can see with your own eyes," the guest speaker smiled but flushed to the roots of his white hair. Ruby Black, the club president, presented him and he talked "off the record and off the cuff" to one of the largest gatherings of club members and guests of the 1939 season.

He discussed the world crisis and this country's attitude in the face of it, speaking earnestly and including a tribute to the press for its effort to adhere to facts in reporting the war situation.

Question Forum Follows Talk

At the close of his talk he answered questions on everything from social security to sugar prices. It might be added that he was "kind but firm" in dealing with one or two questions which pressed him to commit himself further than he was willing to on matters of public concern.

Mrs. McNutt was unable to be present at the luncheon as she is in Indiana with their daughter, Louise, who is enrolling as a freshman in the State university.

Special guests of the club were press chiefs of the various Federal Security agencies, one of whom was Herbert Little, of the National Youth Administration, husband of the club president. Others were Guy McKinney, of the Civilian Conservation Corps; John Lloyd, of the Office of Education; Max Stern and Jessie Irwin, of the Social Security Board.

Dr. Roberta Ma Among Guests

Among other guests were Dr. Roberta Ma, who is again in Washington, speaking in behalf of the church committee for China relief; Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce, Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. Thomas F. McAllister, chairman of the Woman's division of the Democratic National Committee; Mrs. David Tucker Brown, president of the Woman's National Democratic Club; Ernest K. Lindley, a columnist of The Post; Mary Mason, of the radio; former Representative Virginia Jenckes, of Indiana; Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board; Mrs. Nell V. Smith, president of the Professional Writers Club, and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. C. William Smith, of Evanston, Ill.; Mrs. Frederick Benton, who was a guest of Miss Maud McDougall; Mrs. Dorothy B. Harper, and Mrs. Louis Caldwell.

The club will have a dinner meeting preceding its regular business session, October 3, at which members just returned from Europe, as well as those who have been on flying adventures, will describe their experiences. Among those who are "refugees" from the European war are Doris Fleeson, Katherine Hillyer, Mary Bainbridge Hayden, Frances Parkinson Keyes and Marian Jones. The air-minded members are Alice Rogers Hager, Violet Sweet Haven, Inez Robb and Marjorie Shuler.

Chevy Chase Club Entertains Foreign Guests

Tea Is Given for Delegates to Geodesy Union

Foreign women here for the Congress of the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics were guests of honor yesterday afternoon at a tea given by the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase in its year-old clubhouse, Connecticut avenue and Dunlop street.

The affair was planned with the purpose of affording the visitors an opportunity to see the kind of work carried on by American women's clubs and their contribution to the community. Paintings by members of the art section under the chairmanship of Mrs. Benjamin H. Bennett as well as articles of handicraft made by members were displayed in the clubhouse. Flowers used in the decorations were from the members' gardens and were arranged by Mrs. Frederick H. Untiedt, secretary of the garden section, in the absence of Mrs. Dudley F. Holtman, the chairman, who is out of town.

Official Board Receives Guests

Mrs. Frederic M. Kerby, new president of the club, and members of her official board, formed the receiving line. With her were Mrs. H. DeCoursey Adams, first vice president; Mrs. Arthur T. Davenport, second vice president; Mrs. Philip Gott, recording secretary; Mrs. F. S. Brackett, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Louis Murphy, treasurer.

Mrs. Edgar Fowler, former chairman of the international relations section, was general chairman of the tea. The international relations section, of which Mrs. Lawrence O. Manley is now chairman; the German section, headed by Mrs. Leighton H. Peebles, and the French section, by Mrs. Jams F. Price, all cooperated in plans for the event.

Mrs. Hilton, Mrs. Howard Back From Curtailed European Tour

Music Club Officers Attended Haselmere Festival and Eisteddfodd; Found Opera in Paris Almost Deserted

Mrs. Miriam B. Hilton, first vice president of the Friday Morning Music Club, and Mrs. Florence Howard, assistant director, have returned to Washington after a summer "music tour" of Europe, which was rudely interrupted by the warning of war drums. They arrived in New York aboard the Champlain, September 5, after a tense but uneventful crossing, and remained in New York for a few days before returning to the Capital.

The first of their trip was unmarred by the war crisis. They went to England, spending two weeks in London, where they coached with Maurice Doisley and his wife, Rosina Buckman, both Covent Garden stars. From there they went to the Haselmere Festival, given by the Arnold Dolmetsch family and devoted entirely to music of ancient instruments. Mrs. Hilton renewed her acquaintance with Mr. Dolmetsch, who is now so advanced in age that he no longer directs the festival but leaves it in the hands of his sons.

Heard Eisteddfodd In Denbigh, Wales

From there they went to Denbigh, Wales, attended the Eisteddfodd and heard Lloyd George who addressed the gathering. Lord and Lady Clywd also were guests of honor at the songfest. After their stay in Denbigh, Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Howard went to Llandudno, a shore resort in Wales.

They next visited Italy and had been there eight days when the war situation sent them hurrying back to Paris to arrange their passage home. They changed from their plan to come on the Normandie booking passage on the Champlain within 24 hours after their arrival in Paris. When they received word late Monday afternoon, that all arrangements had been completed for their sailing Tuesday, they decided to have one last evening of music to remember. They bought tickets for the opera.

Opera Almost Deserted in Paris

War had not yet been declared and, aside from the orders to leave promptly for home, they had come in contact with little to impress them with the gravity of the situation. But, when they attended the opera that night it was borne in upon them. They heard a brilliant performance but were among a handful of 200 comprising the audience in the great opera house, making it a strange and memorable experience.

On the voyage home, the whole ship was darkened except for weird blue lights. There were 1,100 passengers aboard, about 600 more than the ship customarily carried.

Mrs. Hilton is now preparing for her work as chairman of the public school committee of the National Symphony Orchestra Association.

Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith Returns From Canada

Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith is back in town after a summer in Canada. She has taken an apartment at the Shoreham for the present, but has not yet decided whether she will open her house on R street for the winter season.

Next week Mrs. Meredith's granddaughter, Miss Barbara Bohen, of Des Moines, Iowa, will join her, to enter the Madeira School.

Gives Luncheon

Miss Frances Aaronson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Aaronson, entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Woodmont Country Club, prior to her departure later in the week for the University of Michigan, where she will resume her studies.

America Daughters Open Convention With Initiation

A class initiation, conducted by the degree team of Unity Council, daughters of America, last night opened the convention of the D. C. State council at the Mayflower Hotel. Mrs. Laura Milbourn was the captain of the team and Mrs. Ruth Warren, State councilor, presided at the session.

This morning a public meeting will be held at which Theodore McKeldin, of Baltimore, will speak, with the annual good fellowship banquet and dance taking place tonight.

Election of officers will be tomorrow morning. Mrs. Marie Stephanson, who is now State vice councilor, is slated to advance to the position of councilor, with Mrs. Milbourn as her associate. Others who advance automatically are Mrs. Clara Owens to the office of State vice councilor and Mrs. Vera Meyers to that of associate vice councilor. Candidates for other offices will be nominated this afternoon.

$10,000 Sought To Aid Chinese

A campaign October 22 to 29 to raise $10,000 for China relief was announced yesterday at the luncheon of the Washington Church Committee for Aid to China, held at the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Wilbur LaRoe, of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, was appointed to contact the women's church groups, and Page Etchison and Charles E. Ressner, those in the Sunday School Association.

Dr. W. L. Darby, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, announced $10,000 as the quota proposed for Washington by the national headquarters of the committee. Dr. John R. Edwards, chairman of international relations for the Federation of Churches, will assist in the campaign and both white and colored congregations will join in it.

Dr. Charles Enders, who, with Dr. Edwards and Dr. Darby, heads the local church committee, presided at yesterday's luncheon.

Claire and Mrs. Snow Return to Washington

Mrs. Enid Sims Snow and her daughter, Claire, have returned to their apartment at the Shoreham from Nantucket, Mass., where they spent the summer.

En route to Washington they stopped in New York for a few days. Mrs. Snow intends to stay in Washington for the rest of the season, but Miss Snow will leave early in October for Miss Porter's School in Farmington, Conn.

Mrs. Grady Hostess to Friends Scarcely Together Since Spring

Mrs. Hornbeck, Mrs. Clarke, Mrs. Stewart And Mrs. Brand Pour at Informal Tea; Countess Potocka and Son at Lausanne

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

"Make a wish . . . and it will come true," said Mrs. Henry F. Grady yesterday afternoon as she displayed her newest possession—"the god who gives you anything you want," a tall bronze-colored figurine, with a bald head and an intriguing smile.

It came from the Golden Gate Exposition at San Francisco. Mrs. Grady saw it there; wished for it; inquired about its value; decided she couldn't afford it; and found it waiting for her in Washington when she returned.

Guests who saw it yesterday at Mrs. Grady's very informal tea—which was NOT a party—wished . . . and wished again . . . and then lingered to enjoy the get-together that began at 4 o'clock and was still going strong a couple of hours later. The event was arranged so the hostess would have a chance to greet a number of her close friends who haven't been gathered under one roof since last spring.

Mrs. Grady was gowned in a floor-length frock, fashioned with a handsome blue and gold-striped jacket and a black skirt, cut on simple lines. Low bowls of zinnias decorated the drawing room and centered the dining room table, where tea and fish-house punch were served. A special feature of the decorative motif were small Chinese figurines, in gayly-colored robes, arranged around the centerpiece.

Among those who poured tea were Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Brent Clarke, Mrs. Carroll Stewart and Mrs. Charles J. Brand. To mention but a few of the other guests, there were Mrs. Justin Miller, who is working on another novel; Mrs. Scott Lambert, who recently moved to Washington from San Francisco and is making her home at the Hay Adams House; Mrs. Henry L. Deimel, jr., Mrs. Mordecai Ezekiel, Mrs. Basil Manly, Mrs. Samuel Herrick, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Mrs. Irene Caldwell, Mrs. J. E. Saugstad, Mrs. Stewart Broun and Mrs. Raymond Clapper and her daughter, Miss Janet Clapper.

CHANGING the subject: Countess Potocka, wife of the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, hasn't been in Washington for a couple of years but local residents still remember her as one of the most attractive diplomatic hostesses ever to come here. So reports that Lancut, the Potocki ancestral estate in Poland, has been taken over by German forces gave rise on all sides to the question, "Where is Countess Potocka?"

Well, it seems that both she and the Ambassador's son, Stanislas, are safe at Lausanne, Switzerland, where they have been since early in July and where they expect to remain for some time. According to word from the Polish Embassy yesterday, there is no news yet as to what has happened to the Ambassador's brother Count Alfred Potocki, owner of Lancut, and his mother, Countess Betka, who in the earlly days of the war was devoting her attention to establishment of a hospital.

SINCE MOST NEWS around these parts, even society news, seems to tie up with the conflict in Europe, you can't walk two steps without hearing inquiries about local residents who have been abroad or who may be remaining there, despite the war. "What about the Alan Kirks? When will Mrs. Kirk and her son and daughters be back?"

Capt. Kirk is Naval Attache of the United States Embassy at London, having assumed that duty a few months ago. Mrs. Kirk and her son joined him shortly after he went there, and their daughters, the Misses Marian and Deborah Kirk, sailed in June.

MISS MARIAN KIRK, however, is back in town, having returned to this country last week on the Manhattan. She expects to be with her grandmother, Mrs. Frederic L. Chapin most of the time between now and October 2, when she will resume her studies at Bryn Mawr College.

Mrs. Chapin, who has been summering at Black Point, Niantic, Conn., has just returned to Washington and has taken an apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue northwest.

Miss Kirk reports that her brother, Roger; her sister, Deborah, and Mrs. Kirk all are remaining in England and are now located in a rural section not far from London. They are not planning to return to America any time soon.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Capitalites lingering on Cape Cod for the final days of summer seem to be enjoying an endless round of farewell fetes. . . . Mrs. Buchanan Merryman, who is visiting Mrs. Gilbert M. Hitchcock, and Mrs. Hitchcock were among guests at a recent cocktail party given by Mrs. Edward Crossett, of Chicago. . . . Others there included Mrs. Thomas Gaff and Mrs. Cary Langhorne, whose Washington home is now the Colombian Embassy; Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, who will return to the Capital early next week; George Abell, who has been summering in Cuba and now is visiting the Stoddards on Cape Cod; Mr. and Mrs. C. B. ("Barney") Goodspeed, of Chicago, who are widely known here, and Count and Countess Pieri, who visit here frequently.

Miss Yeager, Earl Emerson Are Married

Evening Ceremony Is at Hamline Methodist Church

Wearing her mother's wedding gown of imported lace over satin, Miss Florence Vincent Yeager, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Harvey Yeager, of 210 Jefferson place, was married last evening at 8:30 to Earl W. Emerson, son of Mrs. Benjamin L. Emerson and the late Mr. Emerson, of Washington.

The Hamline Methodist Church, the scene of the ceremony, was decked with oak foliage and baskets of white gladioli and dahlias. The Rev. H. W. Burgan officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her gown had a Queen Elizabeth collar, short white chiffon sleeves and a bustle which ended in a train. Her long veil of silk fell from a tiara of seed pearls, and she carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Vivian Vincent Yeager was maid of honor, wearing a peach taffeta frock with a basque waist and full skirt. A matching bow in her hair completed her costume and she carried talisman roses and blue delphinium tied with green ribbon.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Florence May Evans, Louise Floyd and Virginia Amadon. They wore frocks like that of the maid of honor, in blue, green and rose, with matching bows, and carried arm bouquets of pastel flowers. Elizabeth Manny was flower girl, wearing white ruffled net.

Frederick W. Amadon, jr., was best man, and the ushers were James L. Murray, Curtis Porterfield, Henry G. Herrell, and Thomas G. Owen.

A reception in the church parlor followed the ceremony. Assisting was Mrs. Della J. Burlingame, aunt of the bridegroom, who wore blue lace with a corsage of white orchids. Mrs. Yeager was dressed in blue chiffon, with a similar corsage, and the bridegroom's mother wore clover chiffon and a cluster of white orchids.

The couple had planned to leave for Bermuda, but canceled their sailing because of war and instead will go to New York and Atlantic City. When she left for her honeymoon the bride wore a green flowered redingote with a blue velvet collar and a corsage of white orchids. The couple will make their home at 1408 Decatur street.

The bride was graduated in 1938 from American University. Her husband attended the Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh and is now studying at George Washington University.

Among out of town guests at the wedding were Mrs. Russell T. Wall and Mrs. A. A. Underwood, of Scranton, Pa.; Mrs. O. A. Vincent, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and Miss Lucille Olmstead, of Harrisburg, Pa.

Angela Adams, Barry Mohun, Jr., To Wed Oct. 7

Miss Angela Adams, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Adams, early this summer announced her engagement to Barry Mohun, jr., has chosen October 7 as the date of her wedding.

Only members of the two families and close friends will witness the ceremony, which will take place in St. John's Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. A reception at the Sulgrave Club will follow the ceremony.

Miss Anne Turner will serve as maid of honor for Miss Adams, whose only other attendant will be Miss Eleanor Coburn, daughter of Mr. Mohun's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Coburn, of Farmington, Conn. She will be flower girl.

Eugene F. O'Connor 3d, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, will be best man, and the ushers will include Charles A. McKenney, jr., Frank S. Hight, jr., and Tinsley Adams, of Washington, and John E. Semmes 3d, of Baltimore.

Nora Magee's Betrothal Announced To William Lawrence Breese

Of wide interest here is the announcement (exclusive!) by Mr. and Mrs. Allan Magee, of Montreal, of the engagement of their daughter, Nora, to William Lawrence Breese, of New York and Washington, son of Mrs. William L. Breeze, of New York and this city, and the late Mr. Breese.

Miss Magee, who is visiting Mrs. Breese and her fiance, is a former member of the Junior League of Montreal. She served as social secretary last year to Lady Marler, wife of the Canadian Minister. Sir Herbert's resignation from his post here was announced yesterday.

Miss Magee is a sister of Mrs. David Walker, the former Miss Willa Magee, who had a turn as Lady Marler's secretary two winters ago. Her marriage to Capt. Walker, of Scotland, took place in July.

Mr. Breese is a graduate of St. Mark's School and Harvard, and is now working with the Red Cross here. He is a nephew of Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York.

MISS BETH THOMPSON, who will be married on Saturday to Garfield Swift, the singer, is down with a dreary cold, and her fiance is busy rehearsing in New York for an important forthcoming appearance, so the prewedding round of parties will not start for them until the end of the week. Mr. Swift will arrive from New York on Thursday evening, and that night Mrs. John W. Thompson, jr., sister-in-law of the bride-elect, will give an informal supper for them.

The next evening, following the rehearsal, the entire bridal party will gather at the Shoreham for a dinner to be given by Mrs. Smith Hempstone, Miss Thompson's mother, and Capt. Hempstone. They will gather first for cocktails in the apartment of Mrs. Henry Flood, whose daughter, Miss Eleanor Flood, will be a bridesmaid.

Though Mr. Swift and his bride have already taken an apartment in New York, they will come back to Washington on Thursday, September 21, for a week, as Mr. Swift will appear at the Earle Theater then. Though he is primarily a concert singer, speaks seven languages, and is studying for opera, he sings popular songs from time to time, and recently made an appearance as guest artist with Ben Bernie.

MISS THOMPSON has already had a glimpse of the entertainment world into which she is about to marry, having played several small roles in New York theaters. She also has modeled. She plans to give up her theater career after becoming Mrs. Swift, but is very much interested in radio work and, if the opportunity arrives, might do some.

Mrs. Luther Sheldon, formerly Mrs. Ralph McDowell, aunt of Miss Thompson, will come here with Capt. Sheldon for the wedding. The ceremony, which will take place at St. Thomas' Church, will be followed by a reception at the home of Theodore W. Noyes, grandfather of the future bride. Capt. and Mrs. Hempstone and their family have been making their home with Mr. Noyes since returning to Washington a year or so ago.

MISS MARY DORA THOMPSON, who made her debut last winter, will serve as maid of honor for her sister, and matrons of honor will be Mrs. George Harris, of Detroit, and Mrs. Thompson. Besides Miss Flood, the other attendants include the Misses Eleanor Hampstone, Dorothy Coman and Letitia Knox.

Dr. George Harris will be best man, and the ushers include John W. Thompson, L. Metcalfe Walling and Raymond Asserson, jr., of Washington, and Burr Crandall, Luigi Rosini and Richmond White, of New York.

Miss Thompson studied at Miss Beard's School in New Jersey. Her mother was one of the founders of the Jnior League of Washington when it was organized here 26 years ago.

SEYFULLAH ESSEN has written friends from Buenos Aires that he is not coming to Washington as he had originally planned, on his way to his new post in Tokyo. Owing to the war, the popular former secretary of the Turkish Embassy here, has decided to go direct to California instead and sail from there . . . Miss Dorothea Villard is in town from New York for a few days and is stopping at the Hay-Adams House while getting her new house on N street in order. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard.

THE CHEVY CHASE CLUB is thronged these late summer afternoons with tennis fans. Among those who have been playing almost every day are Mrs. Carroll Morgan, Mrs. George Walker, Mrs. Thomas Bradley, Mrs. Horace Peters Frances Carter and Anne Ellis. The latter is one of the best players in the District . . . The High Commissioner to the Philippines and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre will stop for brief visits in Chicago and Denver en route to the West Coast, where they will sail September 22 for Manila. Mrs. Sayre's daughter, Miss Eleanor Sayre, is not yet sure whether she will be in Washington or Cambridge this winter. She has been studying art at the Fogg Museum there, and during the last summer she and her brother, Woodrow Wilson Sayre, who was studying music, shared a house with two German refugees.

D. C. Truck Drivers Go On Strike

Jurisdictional Fight Blamed; 300 Due To Leave Jobs On Projects Today

Eighty A. F. of L. truck drivers walked out on the new Social Security building construction job yesterday in a jurisdictional dispute with the members of an A. F. of L. engineers' local employed on the same project.

The strike occurred despite the fact that jurisdictional strikes were specifically barred by an agreement reached at a meeting of A. F. of L. vice presidents at Atlantic City last month.

More than 300 truck drivers will strike today on five other construction jobs, at Gallinger and St. Elizabeth's Hospitals and at two sewer projects, Stuart A. Keyser, business agent of the truck drivers union, Drivers, Chauffeurs and Helpers Local 639, said last night.

The drivers struck in protest of the action of McCloskey & Co., contractors, in manning transit mixers (combination concrete mixers and trucks) with engineers instead of truck drivers.

While transit mixers were formerly handled by engineers, a Buildings Trade Association referee's ruling of January, 1938, stipulated that only truck drivers were to handle the mixers, Keyser said.

According to a Master Builders Association official, however, the ruling never went into effect and was never abided by in engineering projects throughout the country.

The truck drivers walkout actually an "outlaw' strike, the official said, because of the violation of the Atlantic City agreement.

A two weeks' tie-up of construction on Federal and District buildings was ended last week with settlement of the Smoot Sand & Gravel and the union plumber's strike.

Billboards, Stickers on Milk Bottles, Placards on Blackboards, Even Blimp, To Be Used in Crusading for Caution

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Washington will launch an intensive, long-range offensive against traffic casualties next Monday as part of a year-round highway safety program adopted recently by the Traffic Advisory Council.

New, and in many instances unique, methods will be employed throughout the city to combat accident evils, said Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer. The result of long preparation and study, the program will include features never before used in a local safety crusade. Steps to be taken Monday—the opening day of school—include:

Bottles of milk delivered to homes will bear safety warnings to parents and car owners.

Blimp Will Assist

The Goodyear Blimp will fly over the city trailing streamers with safety slogans.

Words of caution to pedestrians will be lettered on sidewalks at every city intersection.

Six-foot billboards with warnings against excessive speeds will be erected at 12 major entrances to the District.

Cardboard strips to impress upon juvenile minds the necessity for care in traffic will be placed atop blackboards in every public school.

During the week safety admonitions will be carried by buses and street cars and signs will be placed in gasoline filling stations across the city.

Van Duzer said the new attack on traffic menaces will gradually enlarge until 14 points of the original program have been placed in effect. From then on, he added, the drive will become a permanent, year-around proposition.

At intersections controlled by lights, sidewalk lettering will say "Cross with the green light." At uncontrolled corners and in the vicinity of schools, the warning will be "Look both ways before crossing."

Signs at entrances to the city will caution visitors: "Welcome to your Nation's Capital. Speed limit is 25 miles per hour. This limit strictly enforced."

"We are going to try harder than ever," said Van Duzer," to drive carelessness and negligence from our streets. We hope to make Washington one of America's safest cities—but we need help from everyone."

Officer Sent to School

Meanwhile long-waited steps to provide Washington with a trained traffic supervisor for the Police Department were taken yesterday when Capt. Arthur Miller, of the First Precinct, received the initial payment of a $1,200 fellowship to the Northwestern University Traffic Institute at Evanston, Ill.

Capt. Miller will leave for Evanston tomorrow. He will remain eight months, returning here June 19, 1940, after extensive studies in modern methods of traffic control work.

He is expected to be placed in charge of traffic work when he returns to Washington.

Ex-Director Says GHA Is Incompetent

'High-Pressuring Not Far Short of Intimidation,' Holds Dr. H. R. Brown

Group Health Association was called yesterday by a former medical director an unworkable scheme which "involves incompetent tinkering with the health of from 1,400 to 3,600 persons and a high-pressuring of Government employes by methods not far short of outright intimidation."

In an attack even more bitter than any of those made by the American Medical Association since GHA was inaugurated here nearly two years ago, Dr. Henry Rolf Brown writes in the current issue of "Medical Economics" that he resigned because "I could no longer tolerate the irregular way GHA was being handled."

"Medical Economics" is known as "the business magazine of the medical profession" and claims a circulation of 128,000. Dr. Brown's article is entitled "Why I Quit the GHA."

Urges Investigation

Resignation of Dr. Brown, first medical director of the Government workers' health co-operative, in April, 1938, was atributed to poor health by certain Federal officials at that time, though he, himself, made public no reason.

Dr. Brown, in his article, says his story "should be investigated by a Congressional committee, for it relates to the diversion of public funds for purposes unauthorized by Congress."

It was recalled that at the time of his resignation Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, asserted that Dr. Brown's action called for a sweeping investigation of GHA.

D. C. Won't Appeal

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal announced yesterday that the District will not appeal the Court of Appeals ruling of Monday that Group Health Association is not an insurance company.

A comparably favorable verdict to GHA was handed down several months ago when it was held not to be a corporation engaged illegally in the practice of medicine. The health group also is the principal figure in the Department of Justice's pending fight to prove that the American Medical Association and 21 affiliated physicians have violated the Federal antitrust laws.

"Fantastic," is Dr. Brown's word for the department's campaign in his article.

"The Group Health Association," Dr. Brown says, "has been serving as a guinea pig for those members of the Administration who have been behind the so-called Wagner national health program and the Wagner health act."

Present medical director of the GHA is Dr. Mario Scandiffio, successor to Dr. Raymond E. Selders, who followed Dr. Brown as head of the clinic, located at 1328 I street northwest.

Ramspeck Advocates Bill to Extend U. S. Civil Service Ranks

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 12.—Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, today told the American Federation of Government Employes here that passage of H. R. 960, a bill to extend the civil service, would have obviated any need for the Hatch act.

The bill, drafted by Ramspeck and allowed a preferential satus shortly before the close of Congress, would have blanketed several hundred thousand employes into civil service, extending the scope of the President's June 24, 1938, executive order.

Practically every safeguard against political activity by public employes and officials already is contained in civil service regulations, said Ramspeck, commenting there are few major scandals among civil service workers. They go about their business efficiently and free of politics, he said.

Hopes for Passage

He expressed hope that Congress would pass the bill at the next session, and go even further by compelling the States and political subdivisions using Federal funds to hire merit employes on the Federally-financed work.

Communism and nazism are not as great a menance to America as the spoils system and consequent corrupt government, he said. He said he didn't blame political appointees for scandals occurring in several States, notably Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Tennessee, but would put the blame on the system of patronage.

Meanwhile, Col. Charles I. Stengle is being urged by many delegates to continue as president of A. F. G. E., but he has refused a rally of voting strength last night, indicated that Cecil E. Custer, of Washington, will be the nevt president.

James J. Knoud, American Federation of Labor official in Philadelphia, speaking on behalf of William Green, said the blame for the division in labor "does not rest on the shoulders of the A. F. L." and that what the outcome will be is conjecture. "But, the A. F. L. will survive," he said. He pledged the Federation's support to America if war should come. He said the A. F. L. wants peace. "But if necessary we will defend our country against inroads from within and without."

Cornell Commends Employes

Fred C. Cornell, of Washington, chief of the Postoffice Department's maintenance branch, congratulated the custodial employes on their loyalty, adding, "The problems of common interest can be invariably solved effectively through organization, careful consideration and intelligent understanding of said problems, and in this connection your organization is in a position to do much good."

Civil Service Chairman Harry B. Mitchell, who has attended more Government employe banquets than any man in America other than Ramspeck, will speak tomorrow.

Nothing has been said here yet about budget balancing and probable effect upon Government employes. Most of the resolutions dealt with personnel complaints on working conditions.

Firm Presses To Know if It Has ADA Job

An already complicated housing problem became more complicated yesterday.

John Ihlder, executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority, revealed that John McShain, Inc., Baltimore contracting company, has set 3 p. m. today as the deadline by which time it must know whether it will build the ADA-sponsored Ridge road housing project in Anacostia.

However, Ihlder does not know yet whether he can give McShain a definite answer at that time. It all depends on the United States Comptroller General.

The mixup had its origin several weeks ago when bids were opened for the development and the McShain offer of $1,360,000 found to be lowest. Award of the job to that company was recommended by ADA to the United States Housing Authority but the latter, last Wednesday, ordered all bids rejected because they were too high.

Then, after rejection slips had been sent to McShain and the other bidders, the USHA decided to let the contract after all. Ihlder decided, however, that permission of the Comptroller General would be necessary under the circumstances.

Last night Ihlder said that if a decision by the General Accounting Office has not been received by 3 p. m. today, he'll try to prevail upon the contractor to wait a day or two longer. The McShain company had to fix a deadline, Ihlder explained, because of numerous business commitments.

Bluecoat Stricken On Duty, Dies

Stricken apparently with indigestion while cruising near Third and D streets southwest yesterday, Policeman Howard B. Thompson, 37, of 1626 D street northeast, died less than an hour later at Casualty Hospital.

Thompson was working in a scout car with his partner, Private O. A. Salmons. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances Thompson, and two children, Irene, 5, and Belmont, 2. Flags at all precinct stations were ordered at half-staff until after his funeral, arrangements for which had not been completed last night.

Mrs. Susan Whitney Dimock, leader in Washington social and charity circles, died yesterday at her summer home in Bar Harbor, Me.

The widow of Henry F. Dimock, New York and Washington attorney, Mrs. Dimock lived here at 1301 Sixteenth street northwest.

She worked for many years toward the construction of the George Washington Memorial, a gigantic auditorium, and arts, sciences and literature center, begun at Seventh street and Constitution avenue, but since abandoned through lack of funds.

Besides Mrs. Dimock, the late Chief Justice William Howard Taft, the late Mrs. Warren G. Harding, J. Pierpont Morgan and many other prominent persons contributed to the memorial, for whose site and foundation Congress appropriated funds.

Mrs. Dimock was also a member of the board of governors of the National Women's Country Club and sponsored a series of Lenten lectures here in 1927.

Funeral services will be at 2 p. m. tomorrow at South Coventry, Conn.

Federal Workers Hold Protest Meeting Tonight

The United Federal Workers will hold a meeting at 8 p. m. today at union headquarters, 532 Seventeenth street northwest, to protest the alleged refusal of Russell H. Herrell, Government Printing Office personnel director, "to meet with or discuss issues "with union delegations.

The union, a C. I. O. affiliate, announced that Herrell declined to meet with representatives concerned with grievances on compulsory overtime, sick leave rights and methods of giving out salary raises.

Herrell, however, described the situation yesterday as inconsequential." He said the union was seeking to force abandonment of established procedure, which prescribes that grievances be submitted first to a fact-finding board. He added that several complaints about efficiency ratings had been referred to a board of efficiency rating review, and after the findings had been sent to the Public Printer, Herrell would be glad to discuss them with the union.

First Fall Sessions See Need for New Traffic Lights Also Discussed

The rise in food prices since beginning of the European war was discussed by two of the five citizens' groups which held their first meetings of the season yesterday.

Traffic conditions also were weighed, one group urging that the city install additional traffic lights.

Columbia Heights

Columbia Heights Business Men's Association voted to renew its petition to the Commissioners and the Capital Transit Co. for a cross-town bus route connecting Chevy Chase, Columbia Heights and Brookland.

The proposed bus route, which would cross Rock Creek Park from Connecticut avenue to Fourteenth street through Tilden street northwest would cut by more than an hour traveling time between Chevy Chase and Columbia Heights, it was said.

Members also favored lifting of the 4 to 6p.m. parking bank on upper Fourteenth street northwest and widening of the thoroughfare at the intersection of Decatur street northwest. A safety zone in front of the street car barn at this intersection was asked.

The association went on record as favoring extension of its territory to include business establishments in the vicinity of Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue northwest. The meeting was held at Tilford's restaurant, 4728 Fourteenth street.

Logan-Thomas Circle

Protest against the rise in food prices since the beginning of the war was voiced by the Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association at a meeting at the home of its president, Mrs. Frank M. Thompson, 1120 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Dr. Charles Koones presented a petition, adopted by the group, which will be forwarded to the District Police Department, urging more adequate policing of Logan Circle Park at night Delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations elected last night were H. M. Fulton and W. W. Stout.

Summit Park

Meeting in the East Washington Heights Baptist Church, the Summit Park Citizens Association passed a resolution favoring an increase of between $25,000 and $50,000 in the District budget for the purpose of installing more traffic lights.

The body particularly urged installation of safety lights at the intersections of Alabama avenue southeast with Good Hope road, Branch road and Pennsylvania avenue.

Stanton Park

The Stanton Park Citizens Association last night went on record as requesting District police to enforce more vigorously the anti-noise campaign undertaken in the city. The association met at Peabody School. Recent high cost of food and rentals also were discussed.

Capital Priest Noted Calm Acceptance of War By French Who Regarded It as Inevitable

Washington Dancer Relates Terror of London Blackout

A feeling of the inevitability of the second World War on the part of French citizens in rural hamlets as well as in larger cities of the nation was described last night by the Rev. Dr. John K. Cartwright, pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church. Dr. Cartwright returned Saturday on the Ile de France after a month's sojourn in the French Alps.

The pastor had no hair-raising tales of near escape and panic, of submarines sighted on the high seas or armies on the march. He told instead of peasants gathering in hill country hamlets to answer the call to arms.

"Everyone I met in France was marked by that same calm acceptance of the war," said Dr. Cartwright. "There was no panic. Since everyone thought that war was inevitable, they believed that the sooner it came the sooner it would be over."

Parisians Move With Calmness

In Paris he saw little evidence of evacuation. People moved with the same calmness. Only the difficulty of obtaining railroad service, a lack of taxi drivers and porters, and a noticeable scarcity of men on the streets, gave evidence that France was ready for war.

American tourists, although all eager to obtain passage home, were notably without panic, according to Dr. Cartwright. They besieged steamship and transportation lines and the American Embassy, but there was little visible fear in their movements, he said.

This is the second time that Dr. Cartwright has returned to the United States while Europe was at war. In 1917 when this country declared war, he was forced to leave Italy on a neutral ship.

Wollmar Bostron, Swedish Minister to the United States, returned with his wife to Washington last night after a summer trip to Sweden. He arrived in New York Monday aboard the S. S. Kungsholm.

Dancer Also Returns

Bostron has been Minister to the United States since 1926. Formerly he served as Minister to Spain and Portugal, and from 1918 until 1923 was secretary general of the Swedish foreign office.

Another returning tourist who thinks there's "no place like home" is Dancer Gloria Lane, known to her family as La Nelle Avery, of 1440 R street northwest. Gloria was caught in London by a blackout just as she was beginning a return engagement at the Savoy Plaza Hotel, and within three days she was aboard the Ile de France, the engagement canceled, the rest of her tour canceled, and a projected trip to India and the Taj Mahal gone.

"I've never known anything so terrible in all my life," she said yesterday. "I didn't know anything could be so bad until I saw a blackout. I was afraid to go out in the street."

Rules against showing a light are so strictly enforced in London, she said, that if you allow a ray to escape through a window power is cut off by the company.

The crossing was bad, too, "blacked out" and very rough. The passengers danced in the ballroom with only four blue lights, and the ship pitched and tossed, and there were rumors of submarines. "But I was so glad to be coming home, I didn't think of anything else," she said.

Catholic students who came to America from Europe to discuss peace at the Pax Romana at Catholic University two weeks ago are finding that war has cut their road back.

Stranded in New York yesterday were 128 delegates from 16 European countries.

All hal planned to sail on the Ile de France, but its sailing was cancelled; then they switched to the Manhattan, but meanwhile transit visas for those who would have to pass through France were refused. Only 33 English and 7 Irish delegates, Bishop Henri Roger Beassuart and 9 French women were able to sail. The French men had meanwhile been mobilized.

Eight Spaniards and three Italians sailed yesterday on the Italian steamer Roma, and the Dutch group expects to go on a Holland-America liner tomorrow. The rest, billeted in four Catholic colleges in New York, must wait, while Pax Romana officials continue their conversations with foreign consuls and State Department officials.

Nats' Protest Upheld, 3-2 Win of Chisox Voided

Double Bill Today Is Ordered

Harridge Reverses Umpire's Ruling on Twin Killing After Protest by Harris

By Shirley Povich.

Four hours after they lost a 3-2 game to the White Sox at Griffith Stadium yesterday, the Nats won an official reversal in the office of League President Will Harridge who sustained a Washington protest and ordered the game replayed.

To Harridge, Manager Bucky Harris hurriedly communicated his protest after the game and was upheld by the league president in his dispute of a ruling made by Umpire Lou Kolls in the sixth inning. Harris took violent issue with Umpire Kolls who credited the White Sox with a double play, and notified Kolls that the Nats were finishing the game under protest.

Hurried action on the protest was necessary inasmuch as the White Sox today are making their last appearance of the season in Washington and a replay of the game, if it were ordered replayed, must take place today as part of a double header. Harridge gave the teams permission to play a twin bill today in his ruling against Kolls.

Walker Dropped Ball

The disputed play involved a fly ball hit by Taft Wright with one out and Johnny Welaj on base. Left Fielder Gerald Walker dropped Wright's fly intentionally and threw to McNair who tagged out Welaj who dashed for second when he saw the ball dropped. Kolls called Welaj out and then ruled that Wright also was out, despite the fact Wright had reached first with no play being made for him.

Disputing Kolls, who claimed that Walker had held Wright's ball long enough to constitute a catch, Harris cited Rule 24 of the American League regulations, which permits an umpire to call a batter out on an intentionally dropped outfield fly only when two are on base at the time. Harris pointed out that only one base was occupied, and that was the point on which his protest was upheld by Harridge.

There was an indication at the time of Harris' protest that Umpires Eddie Rommel and Carl Hubbard were about to overrule Kolls, but after discussion they took no action beyond accepting Harris' protest officially.

Until the eighth inning, the Nats appeared the winners of the ball game despite the fact that they were being held to four hits by Thornton Lee. Alex Alexandra was holding a 2-1 lead in his duel with Lee, but a pair of errors by George Case in right field yielded the Sox what appeared to be the winning run.

Case Prominent

George Case, who later was to be the chief guilty party in the Nats' defeat, was the chief factor in the Nats' two runs. In the third inning, after Ferrell drew a walk and was sacrificed to second, Case lashed a two-bagger to rightfield to score Ferrell. He scored himself a bit later when Walaj whacked a single to center.

Those 2-0 figures prevailed until the sixth inning when one of Alexandra's two walks led to a Chicago run. But back in the fourth, Johnny Welaj had averted trouble for Alexandra by making one of the fanciest catches of the year at the Stadium. Racing far toward rightfield, Welaj speared a line drive off Kreevich's bat with one hand, and skidded fully a dozen feet on his elbow, holding the ball throughout his back-to-earth journey.

The Sox maneuvered into scoring position in the sixth when Steinbacher led off the inning with a walk and raced to third on Kreevich's single through Alex's legs. He scored while Bloodworth, Travis and Vernon were converting Radcliff's grounder into a double-play.

Lee, himself, touched off the Sox's winning two-run rally in the eighth when he opened the inning with a single to right. Bejma sacrificed him to second with the tying run and he moved to third on Steinbacher's out, a grounder on which Jimmy Bloodworth turned in a fancy play to prevent a run. But Kreevich at that point beat out a slow roller to Vernon for a hit and Lee scored from third.

Then it was that Case thrust himself into the picture for the White Sox. On Radcliff's low liner which should have been the third out, he attempted to make a one-hand catch to save wear and tear on his bare hand, and muffed the ball. Kreevich, on first, raced around the bases, and then galloped home when Case, after retrieving the ball made error No. 2 on the play—a wild throw—past Vernon in the infield.

Cincinnati Beats Dodgers, 3-2, to Maintain Margin

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Sept. 12.—Some late, but timely, clouting by Billy Myers and Buck McCormick enabled the Reds to come from away behind for a 10-inning 3-to-2 decision over the Brooklyn Dodgers today, to maintain their 2½ game pace at the head of the National League.

With Bucky Walters tossing a five-hitter over the overtime route for his twenty-fourth victory, the Reds won out when Myers belted a two-run homer with two out in the ninth, to tie the score, and McCormick drove the game-wrecking tally across with a single in the tenth.

St. Louis Turns Back Phils, 4-3, Remain 3½ Games Behind

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Sept. 12.—The Cardinals remained on even footing with the leading Cincinnati Reds today by defeating the Philadelphia Phillies, 4-3, in the first game of their final home stand.

Three of the Redbirds' five hits off Ike Pearson were home runs.

The first one was by Joe Medwick in the second inning; the second by Johnny Mize in the fifth and the big one by Terry Moore with one on in the seventh.

At that time the Phillies were leading, 3-2, having gained the advantage on Joe Marty's homer with one on. The Phils worked a double steal with runners on first and third to score their first run.

Grimes Slams Homer to Halt Yankees, 4-3

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 12.—Young Ossie Grimes hit a home run to lead off the tenth inning today, giving the Cleveland Indians a 4-to-3 victory over the Yankees and snapping the world champions' eight-game winning streak.

The defeat, coupled with the Boston Red Sox victory, sliced the Yanks' American League lead to 16 games, and still left them needing four more decisions to clinch the pennant.

Grimes' homer came at the expense of Lefty Gomez, who went the whole way for the Yanks and suffered his seventh loss of the season against 12 victories. Mel Harder, route-going hurler for the Tribe, chalked up his twelfth victory against eight losses.

Brownell's 151 Puts Him in Amateur Play

Score of 156 or Under Gains Entrance to Charmed Circle; Maurice McCarthy, Former Georgetown Golfer, One of Pace Setters

Chicago, Sept. 12.—Faith and begorra, 'twas a great day for the Irish!

Three sons of Old Erin—Tom Sheehan, Maurice McCarthy and B. Patrick Abbott—made the National Amateur gold championship's wind-up qualifying program their own party today. And as true Irishmen are wont to do, they swung their "shillelaghs" in a grand battle amongst themselves.

Sheehan, a husky 22-year-old youth who is learning the gear mechanics business in Detroit, came out of the scrap on top with a great 36-hole total of 139. It gave him medalist honors—and more. His aggregate clipped two shots off the all-time 36-hole qualifying record for the 43-year-old championship, which tomorrow will send 64 players into match play. Scores of 156 or better qualified.

McCarthy, a copper-pipe salesman from Cincinnati and former Georgetown University star, was the kingpin most of the day with a 142 total before Sheehan took command. Shortly after Sheehan had come grinning off North Shore's eighteenth green, Abbott posted his 143 total, which gave him third place in the qualifying duel.

Sheehan, a blond husky who captained Notre Dame's gold teams two straight seasons before graduating last June, went out in 34, two under par and came back in 35, one under par. He never tightened up before the huge gallery which followed

Alice Marble, Riggs Victors At Forest Hills

By the Associated Press

Forest Hills, N. Y., Sept. 12.—The two Wimbledon champions, Bobby Riggs and Alice Marble, each clipped off another slight sector in the National Tennis tournament at Forest Hills today, as the communiques would say.

Bobby didn't remove his sweater until the second set in administering a brisk 6—4, 6—2, 8—6 spanking to young Edward Alloo, of Berkeley, Calif., while Alice popped jolly Betty Nuthall, of London, 6—0, 6—2, before a chilled stadium crowd.

This placed the pair of them in the quarter-finals, along with approximately half the championship field. One women's match, be-

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

As the Nats flounder in sixth place, it is pertinent to recall what proved to be the prophetic remarks of Clark Griffith six months ago when his ball club was primping in the South for the 1939 campaign. "There are two players who will make or break this ball club," said Griffith.

POVICH

He knew who they were and said so. "If Bobby Estalella and Jimmy Wasdell make good for us, we will have a fine ball team. If they don't, it is apt to be pretty bad," said the Nats' owner. "They are the key men in our 1939 setup."

Well, you know what happened. Wasdell didn't get as far as midseason with the Nats and Estalella the other day got his transportation to Minneapolis. Flops is the word for them both, and, as Griffith prophesied, the Nats turned out to be a bad sort of ball club.

But that they were the key men in the Nats' 1939 picture is logical enough. It requires no vivid imagination to conceive the Nats as a potent entry with a hard-hitting, sure-fielding first baseman, and a slugging outfielder of the type that Estalella proved to be on alternate Tuesdays. With all there other deficiencies, the Nats would have been a first-division club if Wasdell and Estalella had justified the hopes Griffith had for them.

Esty's Failure Is Painful to the Old Fox

Estalella, released outright to Minneapolis, no longer is the property of the Nats and his failure was more than a bit painful to Griffith who visioned the little Cuban as the answer to his supplications for an outfielder who could hit the ball a long way. In the belief that sometime Estalella would learn to adjust himself to big league pitching, Griffith held strings on him for four years before finally conceding his failure.

Estalella's failure is an old big league story. The little Cuban joins that vast company of big league backsliders who could always pound minor league hurling but had no success against major league pitching. He will probably continue to amass powerful averages in the minors, where batters rarely see good pitching more than twice a week, but teams with an idea of recalling him to the big leagues will be wary. They have seen his type before.

For a long time, Griffith was lenient with Estalella, willing to overlook his failure to hit consistently because of the belief that major league hurlers resented the presence of the Cuban in the big leagues, and were scaring him away from the plate with bean balls. He liked Estalella's courage in standing up there after being forced to hit the dirt.

When the Curves Came It Was too Bad for Bobby

But in the final analysis, Griffith became convinced that the little Cuban never would hit good pitching at a rate good enough to keep him in the big leagues. Against fast ballers of any description, Estalella would set himself and hammer out his share of hits, including more than a generous sprinkle of extra-base knocks. But when the word got out that he was a sucker for slow curves, he rarely saw a fast ball. And he never could adjust himself to slow stuff. And out of the league he went.

Wasdell is still the property of the Nats and will be back at Orlando next Spring for his third trial with the club. Griffith paid $20,000 for the sawed-off first baseman and he is not the one to quit quickly on a player who represents that kind of an investment. Even when Manager Bucky Harris screwed up his face in a disdainful frown at the prospect of playing Wasdell as his regular first baseman, Griffith continued to hold out hopes for the player.

At Minneapolis, Wasdell has been playing the outfield and hitting a generous share of home runs, but on the suspicion that he will learn, somehow, to hit big league pitching, he again will be groomed as the Nats' first baseman. His fielding does not compare with that of Jimmy Vernon, and his short stature makes him a poor target for thrown balls, but Griffith still likes to envision the long wallops that Wasdell sometimes gets in contrast to the slap-hitting of his other first base candidates.

Pofahl Due to Take Over Shortstop Post

If there is one outstanding change in the Nats next year it will concern the shortstop job, however. With Jimmie Pofahl due to join the Nats from Minneapolis, the shortstop job will doubtless be turned over to him inasmuch as he represents a $40,000 investment. In which case, Bucky Harris will try another new tack with his infield.

In infield practice yesterday, the man observed at third base was Cecil Travis and he was doing a whale of a job of it. Travis, who broke in originally as a third baseman, is destined to regain the job from Buddy Lewis who is to be shifted to the outfield in an attempt to inject more hitting power into the outfield. Travis' magical improvement as a defensive shortstop is causing Harris to entertain the notion that he will be an improved third baseman.

N.B.A. Declares War On Ring Racketeers

A drive against organized gambling and racketeering in the fight business was launched yesterday by the National Boxing Association with the unanimous passage of a resolution putting the duty of eliminating "these ringside vultures" squarely up to boxing commissions and promoters in its member States.

The "no-gambling" resolution points out that enforcement of the law shall be "a police matter."

With adoption of the measure the N. B. A. went on record as insisting that individual promoters in measure States stamp out the gambling evil by asking a special police detail at each boxing show or else risk the loss of their license.

Led by Joseph Trainer, of the Illinois State Boxing Commission, the fight on gambling received wholehearted support of the N. B. A. delegates in convention at the Willard Hotel.

"Disgusting" Sight

"It is rather a disgusting sight to go into certain big arenas, see open pools in action at the ringside and have gamblers there who can, and often do, state just how many rounds the fight is to go," Trainer said.

"If we do not take a determined stand against these ringside vultures now, the boxing game will suffer immeasurably and may even be condemned to slow extinction," he added.

Trainer explained that he did not want to pose the N. B. A. as a board of "reformers" and that the measure was not aimed at what he termed "a friendly bet between two spectators at the ringside."

"But we do condemn the open pools and syndicates that exist in fight clubs throughout the Nation and we want to convince the public of our sincere and honest efforts to put boxing on a clean basis."

Several States already have no-gambling laws, he pointed, which are operating with great success, it was brought out.

Earlier in the day, the N. B. A. voted to recognize as world fly-weight champion the winner of a 15-round contest between Little Dado, of the Philippines, and Enrico Urbinati, of Italy. Dado is to be declared holder of the now-vacant title if Urbinati refuses to meet him within 90 days.

Then, moving into the bantam-weight division, the association ruled Sixto Escobar shall be given until November 2 to defend his championship against Georgie Pace, of Cleveland.

Escobar, due to defend his title under the six-month clause by October 2, was given a special period of grace with the understanding that if he doesn't meet Pace the title will be declared vacant. The N. B. A. would then recognize as champion the winner of a 15-round fight between Pace and Peter Kane, of England.

In an effort to clear up the status of the foul in boxing, the association adopted a resolution recommending to member States that a "no foul" rule giving "discretionary powers" to the official or officials conducting the fight.

Under this rule the official or officials would not be forced to take a round away from a fighter for blows below the belt line, as they now are in New York State.

The executive committee of the N. B. A. was instructed to seek a meeting with the executive board of the Amateur Athletic Union in an effort to clear up "unfortunate conditions" now existing in amateur boxing. It was pointed out these conditions consist of lack of sufficient supervision and that often amateurs fight too many bouts and are "punchy" by the time they apply for licenses as professionals.

Following the lead of the Illinois commission, the association also voted to insist that its member States subject fighters and their handlers to tests for social diseases before allowing them to fight in the individual States.

A bitter fight over its 1940 convention city developed early in yesterday's session, but forces holding out for Winston-Salem, N. C., finally gave in to Milwaukee, Wis. The N. B. A. also ruled that when a contestant fails to answer the bell for a round, his opponent shall be awarded a technical knockout victory in the round for which he fails to appear.

Heurich's 2-Run Rally in 9th Wins in Tournament, 5-4

Dayton Club Eliminated; Stahl Hero

Altes Lager Winner, 5-1; Birmingham 9 Victor, 4-0; Knight Factor in D. C. Rally

For the second successive day it was Huck Stahl's timely single that kept Heurich Brewers in the National Amateur Baseball tournament yesterday. The blow, coming in the ninth with one out, sent Dick Knight and "Pepco" Barry scurrying home with the runs that gave the Beermen a 5-4 decision over Dayton (Ohio) Frigidaires.

The loss put Dayton, which had won its second-round game with just such a rally over Baltimore's representative, out of the tourney. Three other teams—Cleveland's Rosenblooms, Fort Wayne's Nickle Platers and Cumberland's Frostburgs—bowed out as the series reached the fifth round.

The only undefeated nines after yesterday's hostilities were Birmingham (Ala.) Jordon Park and Altes Lager, of Detroit, the defending champion. Birmingham continued its rough treatment of all opposition by smashing Barberton, Ohio, 5-1, behind a four-hit pitching job by Lawrence. And Detroit hoisted its chance of holding the crown by whipping the Jefferson County (Pa.) Kramers, 4-0. That, incidentally, was the only shutout of the day.

In today's feature Birmingham and Detroit clash at the Ellipse at 3 p. m. All other games will be played at the same site at the same time.

Heurich meets the Killian Celtics of Barbeton, Ohio at 3 p. m.

Stahl's crucial hit for Heurich was easily the outstanding blow of yesterday's play. It was one of three hits by the chunky shortstop in five times at bat. The only other Brewer to match Huck's number of hits was Knight, who had a double mixed with his three safeties.

Tommy Doonis, youthful right-hander, went the first six innings for the Beerman and allowed all of Dayton's seven hits. Four of these were bunched in the third inning for all of Dayton's runs. Doonis was relieved by Johnny De Bettencourt in the seventh, the latter pitching two innings of hitless ball.

Washington's delegation seemed about to make a runaway of the game in the second when it jumped into a two-run lead. It was Stahl who precipitated the spree with a single to left. Alec Cabell also singled and the pair then combined in double steal that netted Washington's first run. Before the inning was over, "Rip" Sullivan had walked and stole second, scoring later on Fee Colliere's sacrifice fly. Dayton's rally in the third, nearly Heurich's undoing, came about after two men were out. Lyons singled, Miller also singled, and got all the way to second on George Knepley's error, scoring Lyons. Catcher Prost then pounded out Dayton's only extra base hit, a double, to score Miller and Fine. Prost reached home with the fourth

Ailing Bosox Down Tigers

Boston, Sept. 12.—The crippled Red Sox, opening a long home stand without Manager Joe Cronin and Jimmy Foxx, strengthened their hold on second place today by defeating the Detroit Tigers, 2-1, behind Denny Galehouse's five-hit pitching.

The sockers collected seven hits off the Veteran Tommy Bridges, and Ted Williams was driven in by Bobby Doerr in the fourth and sixth innings for both the runs.

The Detroit tally was registered in the third frame, which Bill Rogell opened with a single. He rested on first until Barney McCosky tripled to rightfield with one out. Galehouse had three strikeouts and did not issue a base on balls.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Sept. 12.—It may be the Ivy League to a lot of football tories, but it's strictly the poison ivy league to Larry Kelley—or so the former Yale star says in the current issue of Look. Like the time Larry broke the jaw of Princeton's Jack White, with a straight-arm, he pulls no punches.

With a good lucid ghost holding his pen, one of the most publicized college players of all-time says, in effect, that the frostiest of all the college football leagues brutally exploits its clean-limbed athletes, shows them no mercy when they bust open at the seams, and proselytes talent just as aggressively as any of the cruder foundries of learning. Ivy League coaches, he adds, care nothing for their players' well-being.

CONSIDINE

Kelley puts in a pretty tough rap against his old coaches, Ducky Pond and Earl Neal. He charges that they used him in the 1936 Brown game a few hours after he emerged in a weakened condition from the Yale Infirmary. In 1935 the Yale coaches put in Fullback Miles, though his knee was in such bad condition that "we wondered if he'd be crippled for life." In 1937 Clint Frank was used frequently when in no condition to play, because, Larry says, it was either the coaches' necks, or Frank's, and the coaches showed a strong preference for Frank's.

Howl of the Wolves Mainly Responsible

Too little has been written about this seamy and often censored side of football. From what we've seen at other colleges, we'll have to believe Kelley, for the differences in football don't go any deeper than the jerseys of the players. The coaches at effete colleges must continue winning, or a loud minority of the alumni will bring about their dismissal. Their self-preservation strain will inevitably prompt them to use injured players who can help the team, though, of course, they can always ease their conscience in this respect by putting the matter up to the player himself. No one in a thousand injured college football players would sit out an important game, if he had the coach's permission to play. To most kids such a decision to remain on the sidelines would be a form of cowardice, or at least a violation of the Spartan precepts laid down by the glued-together heroes of other eras.

We are a Nation full of trick knees, creaky shoulders, broken noses and other football scars, partly because we play football when it isn't sensible to play it. The furious demand for college victories, at any costs, aggravates the condition. It's about time some well-known player brought out the fact that college and prep-school football is a little grimmer than the girls with the yellow chrysanthemums, and the Joe colleges with the bottle under the blanket, suspect.

And, though certainly bad enough, the fruits of the vicious cycle of high pressure football are not as bad at Yale, Harvard, Princeton, etc., as in the cheaper schools where the stoicism of coaches, in the face of their suffering athletes, is incredible to behold.

Jimmy Foxx Is 'Pulling' for Joe MiMaggio

Jimmy Foxx won the batting championship of his league last year with .349. He retired for the season the other day with a fine .358, and had turned in a better year in several other ways than he had during 1938. But on the day that an appendicitis operation stopped him he was 55 percentage points behind Joe DiMaggio. But he didn't squawk at his curious fate.

"That fellow's just a great hitter," he told us. "I hope he hits .400 for the year. It's about time our league had a .400 hitter. Haven't had one since Harry Heilmann did it in 1923. Joe will have to make about 50 or 60 hits during September to do it. But I think he can make the grade. I'd like to see him beat me out by 100 points."

Mrs. Barrol Winner In Corby Cup Golf

Army and Navy Player Returns to Links After Years; Low Gross Prize Annexed by Mrs. Meckley; 134 Compete

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Mrs. M. E. Barrol, returning to competitive golf here after a lapse of several years, took the Corby Cup back to Army and Navy yesterday, winning the event at Columbia with a gross 94 and 16 handicap for a net 78. Mrs. C. Miller won the trophy for the service club two years ago.

Mrs. Barrol topped a field of 134 in the eleventh annual tournament by a 2-stroke margin, Mrs. C. F. Thompson, Army and Navy, and Mrs. Norman Frost of the host club tying for second with 96, 16—80, and 93, 13—80, respectively.

Low gross went to Mrs. Betty Meckley, Indian Spring, with a pair of 42's for an 84, that topped Marion Brown by a single stroke, the latter three-putting the last green to miss a tie with 85. Mrs. Meckley, runnerup in the White Face Invitation, winner of the Shawnee Invitation and semifinalist at White Sulphur Springs in a recent Eastern tour, is currently playing the finest golf of her career.

Mrs. Barrol won other tournaments of the Women's District Golf Association in competition here several years ago, but virtually deserted the game for tennis and riding of late. She played the outgoing nine in 49 and the second nine in 45 for the 94, with a trio of 3's on her card.

Two tied for fourth low net, Mrs. H. J. Simons, Manor, with 90-9, 81, and Jerry Weible, Army and Navy, 99-18, 81 while another two-way deadlock at 82 included Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, 88-6, 82, and Mrs. A. C. Minnix, of the host club, 97-15, 82.

Marion Brown, with 85-2, 83. Mrs. E. T. King, Army and Navy, 101-18, 83, Mrs. A. A. McEntee, Kenwood, 94-11, 83, Mrs. Ellen Harris, Beaver Dam, 91-8, 83, and Baroness de Gruben, Capital, were also in the lengthy prize list, that included the net 84's, Mrs. Charlotte Stern, Indian Spring, 89-5, 84, and Mrs. J. A. Marr, Columbia, 95-11, 84.

The entire field apparently played little golf during the summer months as only 49 of the 131 starters turned in cards, 85 others not reporting to the scorers. Mrs. Leo Walper, who won the District championship over the same course, was in trouble all the way and finished with a 96.

Chicago Girl Tops Advance In Western

Ellamae Williams' Two 77s Gives Her Lead In Women's Derby

By the Associated Press

Evanston, Ill., Sept. 12.—A pair of par equaling 77's today brought a general shakeup along the title front of the Women's Western Golf derby.

Ellamae Williams, Chicago district and Illinois State champion, got one of them and took over first place at the halfway mark of the 72-hole medal play event with a 159 total. She carded an 82 yesterday.

Fifteen-year-old Phyllis Otto, of Omaha, Nebr., blazing home with birdies on the last two holes, got the other and moved into a second place tie with Elizabeth Hicks of Long Beach, Calif. Each had 160, Miss Otto on rounds of 83, 77 and Miss Hicks with 81, 79.

Dorothy Kirby of Atlanta, Ga., ranked next with 161, while five strokes back of the leader came yesterday's pace setter, Marion Miley of Lexington, Ky. She is bidding for her fourth crown in five years. Miss Miley had trouble with her irons today and posted an 86, which with yesterday's 78 gave her 164.

Tied with her was Marian McDougall, of Milwaukee, Oreg. Then came Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, and Virginia Ingram, of Chicago, each with 166's.

Edith Estabrooks of Dubuque, Iowa, tied for second yesterday, fell off to an 87 for a 167 total. Dorothy Traung of San Francisco had 168 and Janet Smith of Rockford, Ill., 169.

Eighteen hole rounds tomorrow and Thursday will complete the tournament.

Public Links Medal Won By Murphy

Tourney Finalist Gets 75 to Break 4-Way Tie at Rock Creek

Julian Murphy, finalist in last week's public links championship, won the four-way medal playoff yesterday at Rock Creek with a 75, that topped his nearest rival by eight strokes.

Murphy was out in 38 and back in 37 for the 75, while Frank Clark had 39-44, 83, and Jack Sinclair 41-43, 84. C. J. Boucher, who also figured in the original tie at 77, withdrew.

Murphy won the medal awarded to the low scorer at Rock Creek. W. W. Seay and W. H. Alexander topped the fields at Anacostia and East Potomac. It was Murphy's first prize in the tourney as the Leoffler trophy, that went to Champion Andy Oliveri, was the only other award.

Man of the Month

By Walter Johnson,
WJSV Staff Baseball Announcer

Two players—Alex Alexandra and Johnny Welaj—share equally the latest award of points in the Man of the Month contest, following performances in the game yesterday against the White Sox. Points were awarded as follows:

To Alexandra, five points, because he went the route and allowed only two earned runs, keeping the Nats in the ball game despite the fact they were facing four-hit pitching.

To Welaj, five points, because he made two of the Nats' four hits, drove in one of their runs with a single, and contributed the finest fielding play of the game when he made a one-handed, falling catch of Kreevich's line drive in the eighth. The totals:

Taft Wright	14	Buddy Lewis	7
Johnny Welaj	13	Jimmy Bloodworth	6
Ken Chase	10	Pete Appleton	5
Joe Krakauskas	9	Cecil Travis	4

Hash Wins Aqueduct Feature by 5 Lengths at 1-5 Odds

Roman Hero Beats Out Bright Gray

Eddie Arcaro Rides Victor; Jockey James Fined $50 for Post Disobedience

By the Associated Press

Aqueduct, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Mrs. Payne Whitney's Hash, the colt that was beaten a length by Maeda in the Huron Handicap at Saratoga when he was held at 1 to 5, again was installed an odds-on choice over two rivals in the Exterminator Handicap here this afternoon. This time the son of Questionnaire-Delicacy made no mistakes and breezed to the wire a five lengths winner to pay 9 to 20.

The Manhasset Stable's Roman Hero, owned by Mrs. Whitney's daughter, Mrs. Charles Shipman Payson, finished an easy second to make it a family monopoly. River Edge Farm's Bright Gray, the outsider, followed two lengths behind. The time for the mile and a sixteenth was 1:43 3-5.

Hash and Roman Hero are eligible for Saturday's $7,500 added, mile and a furlong Edgemere Handicap, for 3-year-olds and upward. Hash is weighted at 113 and Roman Hero at 106. Today's event was restricted to 3-year-olds. Roman Hero was making his first start since a meritorious campaign on the West Coast, where he won two stakes out of ten trips to the post. He had not been postward since mid-June.

Roman Hero was sent out to make the pace by Basil James, with Eddie Arcaro restraining Hash two lengths behind and Daylight in advance of Bright Gray. Hash began to move up on the pacemaker at the turn. He collared the Pompey colt three-sixteenths of a mile from the wire and just loped along thereafter.

Jockey James was fined $50 by the starter for disobedience at the post astride Lumiere in the third race.

FAIR HAIRED, kept in close attendance of the leaders, drove through on the inside to take command after going a half mile, was ridden vigorously and responded gamely in the closing test. CAFFEINE showed good early speed, lost command when bearing out at the second turn, came again and held on determinedly. A claim of foul against the winner was not allowed. ARROW GIRL raced prominently and finished strongest of all on the inside while in very tight quarters. HENORA made up ground steadily in the closing issue.

SECOND RACE—About 6½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:35. Off 2:36½. Winner, C. M. Feltner's ch. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TULEYRIES STAR, $6.30, $3.20, $2.20; TIMETTA, $3.80, $2.70; FEATHER TREAD, $2.10.

TULEYRIES STAR, going close to the leaders early while under light restraint, moved to the front slowly after going 3 furlongs, was hard ridden in the closing drive and drew out gradually. TIMETTA lost ground on the turns while going well placed, then bettered her position, but failed to stay with the winner. FEATHER TREAD was never far off the pace, but was unable to continue with the leader in the final issue. ROCK MISS was displaced after the first quarter mile and tired steadily.

Daily Double, Fair Haired and Tuleyries Star, Paid $20.30.

THIRD RACE—About 2 miles. Purse, $500; allowances. Steeplechase. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:00. Off 3:00½. Winner, Mrs. A. J. Booker's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PERFECT LIAR, $3.50, $3.30, $3.70; AYLWARD, $3.30, $2.60; RED TRAP, $4.50.

PERFECT LIAR opened up a clear lead soon after the start, fenced cleverly all the way, was mildly shaken up after clearing the final jump and held AYLWARD perfectly safe at the close. AYLWARD, rated off the pace for the first mile, rallied when placed to a drive, but failed to engage the winner in the final issue. RED TRAP was never dangerous. OLAN tired steadily in the last two miles, then quit to a walk.

FOURTH RACE—About 6½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:31. Off 3:32½. Winner, Mrs. James Braswell's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAN AT ARMS, $21.60, $8.90, $4.00; STAR TURN, $5.30, $2.70; IVY X, $2.40.

MAN AT ARMS broke fast and clear to take the lead, set a fast pace while saving ground and responded to a hard drive to withstand STAR TURN. The latter was well up from the beginning, made a bold challenge after going half mile, then continued gamely to the end. IVY X, a slow beginner, worked her way up on the outside to enter contention, then finished gamely. BOO'S LETTER was stoutly ridden and had no excuses.

FIFTH RACE—About 6½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:00. Off 4:01. Winner, E. C. Moyer's blk. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALKANESE, $11.60, $5.30, $3.70; WAY OUT, $3.60, $2.50; ROYAL VEIL, $3.60.

BALKANESE, in hand during the early running, swung to the outside when moving forward, closed stoutly in the last quarter mile and wore the leaders down approaching the finish. WAY OUT raced in close attendance of ROYAL VEIL after losing the lead, made frequent challenges and fought it out gamely. ROYAL VEIL was rushed off his feet to set the pace in the front, failed to draw clear and weakened under punishment. GOLDEN MAYNE was hard urged throughout and held on well.

SIXTH RACE—About 1⅛ miles. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 4:30. Off 4:32½. Winner, H. M. Johnson's br. g. BEN GRIFFITH, permitted to gain his best stride before moving forward, found racing room on the inside when sent into contention, came around SUN SWEEP in the last quarter mile and drew away without effort. SUN SWEEP took command at once, shook off EUDES, but was unable to stay with the winner when caught. EUDES showed good speed for a mile in the thick of contention, then held on well while tiring. TRIXIE LASS, lacking speed in the early running, closed stoutly and was full of run in the last furlong.

SEVENTH RACE—About 1⅛ miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:00. Off 5:02. Winner, G. P. Sherman's br. g. CUSTER, going in his best form under alert handling, assumed a short lead early, was intermittently punished throughout while saving ground and held on determinedly to the close. BYNUM'S RUN raced well placed during the early running and finished willingly when placed to punishment. ROYAL UPSET obtained racing room on the inside to better his position and came stoutly at the close. GRACKY was used up racing abreast of the winner from the start and failed to rally when the real test came.

EIGHTH RACE—About 1⅛ miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 5:30. Off 5:33½. Winner, C. C. Bogrse's b. m. BY SURPRISE, steadied back of the pacemaker, rallied to take command in the last half mile, saved ground and Hamer outrode C. Kirk when it came to a drive. AUFOIN moved forward steadily in the last half mile while on the outside, engaged the winner and fought it out gamely under weak handling. LOCOMOTIVE opened up a clear lead early, but failed to rally when the real test came. CONTRITE lost ground on the turns and could not enter contention.

Brand Lost to Maryland for Season; Other Local Squads Hit

Terps' Back Fractures Vertebrae

Miller, Catholic U., Castiglia, Georgetown, Now on Injury List; Spencer Hilltop Hope

If injuries continue to crop up in local college football circles coaches will have to transfer their blackboards and tackling dummies to the hospitals. Old Kid Injury, the eternal undergraduate who just wouldn't be kicked off any squad, has been working overtime, leaving a destructive path through the grid material amassed at Maryland, Georgetown and Catholic U.

Maryland suffered the hardest blow of yesterday when it was learned that Bob Brand, a senior back, will be lost to the Old Line squad for the remainder of the season. Bumped on the head in scrimmage Monday, Brand was taken to Garfield Hospital and X-rays revealed that he has a fractured vertebrae. Brand won his letter as reserve halfback last season and was being counted on for some hard work this year.

The Old Liners have other injury worries. Bob Smith, regular center, has a battered left knee that may keep him idle for weeks; Elmer Rigby, frosh sprinting star of last year and a backfield candidate, has two broken bones in his right hand; Mearle DuVall, star sophomore back, has a sprained ankle and George Gienger, big guard, and Joe Murphy, hard-running back, are nursing bruised legs.

Castiglia Is Hurt

Not content with erasing Joe Mellendeck through last year's work, Kid Injury yesterday took a fall out of Jim Castiglia, 200-pound Georgetown fullback. Jim limped out of scrimmage yesterday with a badly swollen ankle. Trainer Harry Crowley hopes to have him shipshape within a week. Al Nealon and Joe Daniels are returning to action after suffering minor injuries.

At Catholic U., Vic Miller is on the shelf. He hurt his leg in Monday's scrimmage and will be idle for at least a week. Joe Carrig has been lost, temporarily at least, with a shoulder injury. Lou Shine, has a knee injury suffered last year that is "acting up." Add to this trio the fact that Gerry Strang may have to go to war for Canada and you have the status on the four fine ends that Coach Bergman had when he first counted football noses. By the time End Coach Wayne Millner arrives, he will have a hard time finding a whole end to instruct.

At Maryland, casualties have forced Coach Frank Dobson to go back to experimenting. Bernie Ulman and Max Hunt are being tried in the backfield. Jim Wharton, a 160-pound sophomore, is being tried at center.

Rocco Pirro is coming in for a lot of attention at Catholic U. The revamped tackle has been carrying through the B squad regularly. The line has, heretofore ragged, showed some improvement yesterday. The forward wall went through its assignments in good style.

At Georgetown, an optimistic note was sounded as Jack Spencer, triple threat halfback being groomed to succeed Joe Mellendeck, impressed with his all around performance.

Mellendeck's understudy a year ago and originally destined to again fill that role this season, the 183-pound youngster is making the most of the opportunity offered him by Haggerty following Joe's withdrawal from the squad.

Hagerty yesterday announced that Frank Meglen, 192-pound halfback of a year ago, will shift to fullback this season and is well in the running for the starting call.

Meglen is a senior with plenty of drive and appears to be headed for a big year.

Union of Ring Groups Urged By Dempsey

Insisting that "boxing is too big to allow petty jealousies to stand in the way of its fullest development," Jack Dempsey, No. 1 glamour boy of the fight game, last night emphatically advocated union of the New York State Athletic Commission with the National Boxing Association.

The old Manassa Mauler launched his exhortation upon what is logically considered as the N. B. A.'s last frontier at the association's "ringside night" dinner in the Willard Hotel, at which he was honor guest.

"Already most of the States where boxing is legalized are members of the N. B. A.," Dempsey said.

"To me it is a matter of extreme personal regret that all of the States where boxing is legalized are not yet members of the association, and I most strongly urge that all influence and power be brought to bear on these States to join out association immediately."

First to Be Honored

Dempsey, the first sports figure to be so honored by the N. B. A. in the 20 years since its organization, spoke over two Nation-wide radio hookups.

"The N. B. A. without a doubt has proved its right and value," said Dempsey.

"The N. B. A. has done a grand job, and I have been a great believer in the organization since its inception. I again urge all non-member States to join to make it a bigger, better organization for the betterment of boxing."

High tribute was paid to Dempsey by Claud W. Owen, N. B. A. convention chairman; Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chairman of the District Boxing Commission and superintendent of Metropolitan Police, and Edward Foster, executive secretary of the N. B. A.

Sounds Optimistic Note

An optimistic note for the future of boxing was sounded by Owen, who said that through its "super-authority," the N. B. A., "boxing is rapidly overcoming its difficulties ad facilities are rapidly being set up where boxing will be restored to the place of prominence in sports that it rightly deserves."

Lieut. Col. Harvey L. Miller, scheduled to be elected president of the N. B. A. at its session today, paid tribute to Dempsey as a "true sportsman, gentleman and a fine ideal for American youth."

"Jack Dempsey is truly representative of that great American ideal—an ideal which is possible in America and nowhere else," Miller said.

More than 300 persons attended the dinner honoring Dempsey and saw motion pictures depicting the life of the former heavyweight champion.

Although District Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen was absent because of illness, numerous other District and Federal Government dignitaries attended the dinner to pay homage to Dempsey.

Leiber Slams 4-Run Homer; Cubs Win, 8-3

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 12.—Hank Leiber and Rip Russell hit homers, Leiber with the bases loaded and Billy Herman stole home today to help Bill Lee score his seventeenth triumph as the Chicago Cubs trounced the Boston Bees, 8-3.

Leiber's four-run homer came in the opening inning off Bill Posedel with none out after Sian Hack and Herman had singled and Augie Galan had walked. The Cubs then clouted 12 more hits off Posedel's successors—Johnny Lanning, George Barnicle and Tom Earley.

Herman's theft of home came in the sixth inning when he and Galan worked a double steal on Barnicle's prolonged wind-up.

Brownell Shoots 151 to Qualify in Amateur him. He took a bogie at the thirteenth, then battled back gamely for a birdie at the next hole. He also birdied the tenth on the "in" nine.

His three under par 69, added to a first round 70, lowered by two strokes the old qualifying mark made by Johnny Fischer of Cincinnati in the 1933 championship.

Young Bobby Brownell, Washington golfer who represents Duke University, toured the last nine in 35 strokes after bagging a 40 on the out nine for a 75 and a total of 151, which got him in the charmed circle of qualifiers for match play tomorrow.

Brownell tomorrow will play S. B. Roberts, of Prestatwn, Wales, at 9:40 a. m. Roberts also qualified with a 151.

Brownell's cards:
Out.. 5 5 4 4 4 5 5 4 4—40
In... 4 4 4 3 4 4 3 5 4—35—75—151
Par:

McCarthy, with a 70 yesterday, went out in 38 and came home in 34 today, giving a great display of iron play.

Abbott, a movie extra who was a finalist last year against Champion Willie Turnesa, had a card of 35-37—72 today, even par, to add to his first round 71. His round included an eagle on the 492-yard par five hole.

Turnesa, with a 74 today for a 149 aggregate, was well within the qualaifying field but there were more than a score of players under 'ais total.

Harry Haverstick, of Lancaster, Pa., who had a pace-setting 68 yesterday, fell off to a 76 and was in the 144 bracket with Ross (Sandy) Somerville, former champion, who had 73 today.

Another ex-champion, Johnny Goodman, who won the national open title here in 1933, was at 145, a stroke ahead of such well-knowns as Marvin (Bud) Ward and Dick Chapman, the latter a 1938 semi-finalist at Oakmont.

Among the many who failed to qualify was Gus Moreland, of Peoria, Ill., the 1938 medalist. Moreland had a 78 today for a 158 total.

FCC Charges WMCA Sent Secret War Data

British, Nazi Messages Decoded and Broadcast, U. S. Agency Alleges

Determined to prevent American radio from endangering this country's neutrality, the Federal Communications Commission yesterday cracked down on an independent New York station which it charged broadcast secret military information at the outbreak of the war and then boasted of its scoop.

The FCC charged that Station WMCA had broadcast without authority secret radio communications of German and British military agencies after decoding them, and had thereby violated an international radio treaty and the communications act.

The station, operated by the Knickerbocker Broacasting Co., was ordered to show cause by Friday as to why its license should not be revoked for operations contrary to public interest.

FCC Charge Denied

Donald Flamm, president of the Knickerbocker Broadcasting Co., denied the FCC charge that WMCA had illegally intercepted and broadcast the German and British secret communications, according to the Associated Press.

Flamm said that while he had not received the FCC order, he could say that the station's news broadcasting "was done only through wholly accredited and responsible news gathering agencies."

While the order did not specify the details of the offense, FCC officials said a retired naval code expert had picked up information relative to German troop movements in Poland and British naval maneuvers in the Mediterranean on a short-wave receiver.

The United States, the FCC pointed out, is a signatory to an international treaty, to which Germany and England also have subscribed, to prohibit (a) the unauthorized interception of radio communications not intended for public use, and (b) the divulging of the contents of such messages. Section 605 of the communications act puts this prohibition into law.

Strict Observance Required

"During the period of tense international relations," the order stated, "the public interest, convenience and necessity required strict observance by licensees of radiobroadcast stations in this country of all provisions of international undertakings and Federal legislation relating to the secrecy of international communications."

Military and naval authorities, since the outbreak of the war, have been on the alert for unneutral acts of amateur stations, such as the transmission of secret military information, and are prepared to have all amateurs put off the air if the practice becomes prevalent. The warring nations already have shut them up.

British Censorship Widened

Copyright, 1939, by N. Y. Herald Tribune.

New York, Sept. 12.—Great Britain today widened cable censorship to two additional possessions, the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Hongkong, while France eased restrictions on certain banking messages. Portugal extended its "no code, no cipher" order to its colonies.

While no official reason was given for Portugal's action, it was believed here to be motivated by the country's desire to maintain strict neutrality.

Great Britain's latest announcement on cable messages ordered that all cables to the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and Hongkong be in plain language and bear the address and signature of the sender. The previous order was amended to permit cablegrams to "Lloyd's List" (the cable address of the shipping list of Lloyd's of London) to include the day or date vessels sailed, which was not permitted formerly.

France, meanwhile, approved the use of code or cipher in messages to about 20 leading financial institutions in France, provided the name of the code is inserted.

Germany is the only belligerent which has not yet announced any restriction on cablegrams, although all messages are submitted to strict censorship.

Lost Continent in Midatlantic If Anywhere, Geodesists Say

Shallowest Part of Ocean Is There, Delegates Point Out; Europe and America 'Floated Apart' or Land Sank

If the "lost" continent of Atlantis ever existed at all, it probably was halfway between here and Europe—which is where the Atlantic Ocean is today the most shallow—scientists attending the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics said yesterday.

The legendary land located by Plato, Pliny and other ancient writers as west of the "Pillars of Hercules" and supposed to have been sunk beneath the ocean by an earthquake came into the science meeting during discussions on how and why the continents of America and Europe became separated.

Some of the savants said the two land structures "floated apart" many centuries ago, while others advanced the theory that the area now occupied by the Atlantic Ocean was once level with the two—but sank.

One theory about the sinking was that the "edges" near the present continents went down first—leaving Atlantis above sea level until many years later.

Dr. W. T. Thom, of Princeton University, outstanding structural geologist, pointed out that the deepest part of the Atlantic is immediately off the American coast and that the shallowest is in midocean, called the Middle Atlantic Ridge, probably the location of the "lost" land. Recent samplings of the Atlantic bottom show material of the structure connecting the continents to be practically the same as that of the above-sea-level land.

Leading the discussion, which continued most of the day, were Dr. Thom; Dr. F. V. Meinesz, of the Netherlands; Dr. B. Gutenberg, of the California Institute of Technology, and Dr. H. Jeffreys, of Cambridge, England.

Sessions of the union at George Washington University will continue through Friday. "The Creep of Rocks," "The Uplift of Land," and trips to the Cheltenham Observatory and the department of terrestrial magnetism will occupy most of the attention today.

Juvenile Crime Reduced 40%, Brown Reports

Through the boys' club movement juvenile delinquency has been reduced 40 per cent, Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown reported yesterday.

Although reporting in greater detail on other activities of the department, Maj. Brown said only 58 arrests were necessary last year among boys of club age.

In the last fiscal year the Detective Bureau handled 17,272 cases, a decrease of 2,556, as compared with the previous year.

Court Orders Lovenbein to Quit Parking Lot

Samuel Lovenbein, parking lot operator who has held a District-owned lot at Fourth street and Constitution avenue northwest since his lease expired July 31, was ordered to vacate the property after a hearing before Judge George Aukam in Municipal Court yesterday.

A jury heard Lovenbein act as his own lawyer yesterday but Judge Aukam ruled he had offered no defense on which the jury ought to pass and ordered the eviction verdict.

93 Arrested Here In August Drive Against Noises

Washington's antinoise campaign, started several weeks ago by Commissioner Hazen, netted 93 arrests during August, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, announced yesterday.

The arrests were made under the law prohibiting "unnecessary noise," Maj. Brown said. In the majority of instances, violators were accused of using auto horns for other than emergency warnings.

The drive against nerve-wracking street sounds, said Maj. Brown, has resulted in a marked decrease in traffic accidents. Washington, he added, has now joined other cities which have successfully combated highway casualties by prohibiting unnecessary noise.

D. C. Officials, Commissioners Pruning Budget

Steady Procession Goes to Conference For $50,000,000 Total

Striving for a $50,000,000 budget for 1941 the Commissioners yesterday continued pruning departmental estimates totaling $63,000,000.

In a steady procession heads of the insurance department, weights and measures, Board of Tax Appeals, engineer department, surveyor, municipal architect's office, minimum wage board, public utilities commission and alcoholic beverage control board, appeared before the Commissioners and Budget Director Donovan.

Apparently working on a pre-arranged schedule of decreases, the Commissioners have been cutting the estimates as they proceed with the hearings.

Scheduled for hearings today are: Commission on mental health, zoning commission, motor vehicles, public libraries, sewer department, city refuse division, electrical department, police, fire, health, juvenile court, municipal court, police court and the probation office.

Tomorrow the Commissioners expect to hear representatives of the board of public welfare militia, parks, vehicles and traffic, highway and water departments. These will wind up the department budget requests and it is expected the Commissioners will arrive at their total the early part of next week. They will then submit it to the Budget Bureau.

Pretrial Hearings To Clarify Cases, Justice Explains

Justice Laws, who will preside over the "streamlined" pretrial division of the District Court, gave practical pointers on the new system to 250 lawyers who crowded his courtroom for a lecture yesterday.

"Pretrial hearings," Justice Laws said, "are to clarify issues of a case, so that at the actual trial immaterial and collateral issues do not become the central theme of the litigation."

The pretrial hearing of a case will be scheduled while the case is awaiting trial. The pretrial justice will meet with the opposing lawyers and seek points on which both sides are willing to agree, or which they are willing to drop. Justice Laws said that in other jurisdictions cases frequently were settled at the pretrial conference.

'Brain Trust' Just a Banshee, Says President

Status of Corcoran And Cohen Unchanged, Press Conference Told

By Felix Cotten.

President Roosevelt yesterday used an Irish folklore expression to describe the popular concept of Thomas G. Corcoran and Benjamin V. Cohen as key men in an Administration "brain trust" that had exercised great influence in shaping the course of the New Deal.

He characterized the concept as a two-headed Corcoran-Cohen banshee that only appeared when news writers had attacks of indigestion.

At the same time, he said definitely that the status of Corcoran, a Reconstruction Finance Corporation attorney, and Cohen, general counsel of the National Power Policy Committee, had not been changed.

Its Wailing Heralds Death

Incidentally, Webster's International Dictionary describes a banshee as a female ghost or fairy supposed to warn families of the approaching death of a member. The ghost, according to Irish folklore, is often heard wailing under the windows of the house, or appears wailing and combing her hair, a day or two before death occurs.

The President made his comment when asked about published reports emanating from Hyde Park Saturday that an executive order announced at that time meant the end of the "brain trust." The order reorganized the White House setup to take care of the war emergency.

Tossed "Out the Window"

He placed the responsibility for the report on reporters assigned to accompany him to Hyde Park over the week-end. The reporters, he said, had to have something to write. Since they had originally created the Corcoran-Cohen banshee, and couldn't let it go wandering on through history, they decided to kill it to prove that it had existed.

A reporter asked whether the expression "out the window"—used by reporters at Hyde Park in trying to explain what had happened to the "brain trust"—had been a figment of the reporters' imagination.

Mr. Roosevelt, apparently misunderstanding the question, said the expression "out the window" had been coined by former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, Democratic candidate for President in 1928.

Several of the reporters at Hyde Park, it was recalled, had quoted Stephen T. Early, White House press secretary, as saying that figment of the imagination known as the "brain trust" had been tossed "out the window" as a result of the reorganized White House setup.

In fact the whole announcement regarding the "brain trust," was attributed by several of the news writers to Early. It was explained that Early had been asked what happened to the "brain trust" in view of the Presidential executive order, and employed the window metaphor in reply.

Mr. Roosevelt spoke with considerable feeling in explaining how the reporters had happened to write articles telling of the "brain trust's" demise. Newspapermen attending his press conference came away with the impression that he had been considerably nettled by the expression "brain trust" as well as by what had been written in the past about Corcoran and Cohen.

Judge DeVries Is Dead at 74 In California

Judge Marion De Vries, 74, former Associate Justice of the United States Court of Customs Appeals here, died Monday evening at the ranchhouse where he was born, near Lodi, Calif., after a long illness. He went to California several months ago from his Stoneleigh Court home in Washington.

DeVRIES

Son of a gold prospector of the days of '49, Judge De Vries was born on the ranch in San Joaquin County. Educated at San Joaquin College and the University of Michigan, he was admitted to the California and Michigan bars in 1887. From 1897 to 1900 he served in Congress as a Representative from California, resigning to become a member of the United States Board of Appraisers (now the U. S. Customs Court) in New York.

He was appointed an associate justice of the U. S. Court of Customs Appeals in Washington in 1910. He retired to private law practice in this city in 1922 after serving one year as presiding judge of the court. In 1892 he married Mary L. Snead, of Dixon Calif., who died in 1927. He was a member of the Yosemite Club of Stockton, Calif.

Another Barrymore Is Drafted for "Big Time"

John's Daughter, Diana, in Metropolitan Debut; Hollywood's Juvenile Stars Back in School; This, That and the Other About the Theater

A NEW ACTING MEMBER of the fourth generation of the theater's "royal family" of Barrymore will make her first appearance before a Washington audience on the stage of the National Theater this season. She is Diana Barrymore, daughter of John Barrymore and Michael Strange.

This latest Miss Barrymore to find her way behind the footlights—she abandoned the family name of Blythe for obvious reasons—made her debut at the Ogonquit Playhouse this past summer, where, among numerous other roles, she played Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet." On the strength of this performance she has been articled by William A. Brady and Robinson Smith for the role of Ann in the Playhouse Company's production of "Outward Bound," which will go on tour this season with Laurette Taylor and Florence Reed co-starred and Bramwell Fletcher featured. These three, it will be recalled, appeared in the leading roles in the "command performance" of "Outward Bound," at the National last January, to inaugurate the President's birthday celebrations. The role of Ann at that time was portrayed by Helen Chandler.

BELL

Diana Barrymore's metropolitan debut should be an auspicious one, since the "Outward Bound" tour will open in Philadelphia, "home town" of the Drew-Barrymore family, on October 9, at the Locust Street Theater. It will be seen later as one of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society subscription plays at the National.

Miss Barrymore's Broadway debut will be made later in the season in a new piece which will be tried out on the road during the tour.

Why doesn't some astute or otherwise producer assemble all of the active Barrymores in a single cast and tour them in a body? It wouldn't take more than a $25 top to pay off! Well, it's a free-gratis-for-nothing suggestion that made another paragraph, anyhow.

That Paramount News has gone and done it again. First pictures of the Athenia disaster now are on the screens of the Earle and Metropolitan theaters—and presumably at the Trans-Lux—as another special release. Personal stories of some of the survivors are told in these dramatic sequences, just received from Europe by transatlantic clipper.

Although the Mount Vernon Auto Theater, below Alexandria, Va., on the Richmond highway, will continue in operation through the fall months, the management announces the discontinuance of the extra midnight performances that have been the rule in recent weeks. These special "milkmen's matinees" proved extremely popular when the nights as well as the days were up there in egg-frying temperatures. With the first touches of chill in the midnight air, it has been discovered that they are "not so hot."

If there can be any such thing, here is a bit of solace for the kids who are grumbling about having to go back to school in the belief that the movie youngsters they see on the screen have all the best of it. The movie juveniles had to go back to classes last Monday, too, along with 312,000 other Los Angeles County children.

Shirley Temple opened her books at the Twentieth Century-Fox Studio School, with Principal Frances Klant welcoming her to the sixth grade. With her went Jane Withers, who entered the ninth grade; June Carlson, Sybiljason and Johnny Russell. The Twentieth Century school will have to make room for 500 more children soon, for that many will work with Shirley in her next picture.

Deanna Durbin, Helen Parrish and Gloria Jean re-entered classes at the Universal Studio School, and, at Columbia, Edith Fellows was at her desk. At Warners, Raymond Severn was the only student.

Mickey Rooney, a recent Washington visitor, started back at M.-G.-M. School, along with Virginia Weidler, Gene Reynolds and Judy Garland. Freddie Bartholomew and Terry Kilburn enrolled at RKO-Radio.

So, you see, you kids?

It is a pretty rigid law they have out there in sunny Cali-for-nye-ay. Minors who work in motion pictures can not be held over eight hours a day at the studios. From this daily total, four hours are deducted for classroom study and one hour for lunch. That leaves only three hours a day for performances before the cameras in any man's arithmetic, let alone his studio.

Personally we skipped classes yesterday and missed the preview screening of Paramount's production of "The Star Maker" with Bing Crosby in the name part and Louise Campbell, Linda Ware, Ned Sparks, Laura Hope Crews, Janet Waldo and Dr. Walter Damrosch, in his screen debut, featured.

This is the film play, adapted from a story by Arthur Caesar which, in turn, was suggested by the life of Gus Edwards, that boasts a cast longer than you have been in town, exclusive of 99 younkers who participate in the "star maker's" quest for juvenile talent with which to pack his vaudeville acts. It will all come out on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater on Friday when "The Star Maker" succeeds "The Wizard of Oz" as the major attraction.

In skimming through the outsize cast of principals, one is surprised to note the number of players whose careers have been carried over from an earlier era in the cinema—Thurston Hall, Clara Blandick, Bodil Rosing, Morgan Wallace, Ethel Griffies, Fritzi Brunette and I don't know how many others.

The film play evidently will be reminiscent to old-timers in the theater in more ways than one.

When Gus Edwards set out to discover talent, he really set out to discover talent. Among the most celebrated of the graduates of his acts might be mentioned Eddie Cantor, Georgie Jessel, Walter Winchell, Lila "Cuddles" Lee, Georgie Price and a host of others who have made their own marks in various fields. Probably the contemporary theater's closest approach to Gus Edwards is Benny Davis, with Martha Raye, Vilma and Buddy Ebsen and a few score more to his credit.

Preserving-the-Eternal-Unities Note

Coming along just when it does, it is highly appropriate that "The Star Maker" should "build up," among its old song hits, "School Days" and "An Apple for the Teacher." Heigho!

Celebrate Career of Gus Edwards on the Screen

LOUISE CAMPBELL, LINDA WARE AND BING CROSBY cast in the foremost roles in Paramount's production of "The Star Maker," film play based on the life of one of the theater's greatest developers of juvenile talent, opening Friday on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. Dr. Walter Damrosch, playing himself, makes his screen debut in this picture

"The Nazi-Soviet pact," Paul de Kruif confesses at the Versailles, "has killed the new book I was writing. Anyway, come to the Fair and take a picture—of Broun and me going up in a parachute." . . . "The Young Democrats," a politician assures at Moore's, "are moving their headquarters from Washington to Chicago."

1 A. M.: "Lin Yutang, who wrote 'The Importance of Living,' went with Pearl Buck to see a rehearsal of her play, 'Flight to China,' " a director relates at Sherman's. "They climbed one flight—and were told it's on the second floor. 'I'm sorry,' Pearl told Lin, "maybe it should be called "Two Flights to China" ' " . . . "Hank Greenberg is taking rumba lessons," a ball player states at Tony's. "After two lessons Hank became embarrassed when he saw other customers staring at him—and demanded a screen" . . . "You've got to choose—either you give up fighting this year or else," Mrs. Tony Canzoneri warns her husband at Dempsey's. Tony grins, points to his cauliflowered ears and replies: "Did I ever tell you what Philadelphia Jack O'Brien did to me?"

2 A. M.: "During the last war I went to Europe, and on the boat chatted with a member of the American Relief Assn.," a ringster reminesces at the Penthouse Club. "He wore a strange vest—and told me it's a patented one. He said: 'If this ship's torpedoed, I just take this pipe and blow it up like this. Watch.' He blew and the vest expanded into a life preserver. That man was Herbert Hoover."

3 A. M.: "Harry Hopkins will crack down on profiteering farmers whose produce is second-rate but who are selling large quantities to the Latin-American trade in the recent trade pick-up," an editor informs at the Savoy-Plaza. "Hopkins already has given such instructions to his men" . . .

4 A. M.: "I saw Charles Graves of the London Mail in Paris just before the declaration of war," Edward Duryea Dowling states at the Troc. "He had received instructions not to write anything about a possible French-Italian alliance."

5 A. M.: "Dudley Nichols spoke to Walter Wanger about war's effect upon the movie industry," a scenarist declares at Longchamps. "Wanger explained it this way: If 'Stagecoach' grosses one million dollars, $600,000 would represent the domestic receipts and $400,000 foreign. Now the foreign gross will be reduced immeasurably" . . . "The U. S. Atty's office had a narcotics case against Lepke, and he'll plead guilty to it," a prosecutor states to Reuben's. "That, together with his bail-jumping charge, will total no more than a 10-year term" . . . "Max Gordon phoned me from Hollywood, and said he was lonesome for me," Irving Caesar relates in Lindy's. "I spoke about the weather, and Max's operator cut in to remind us that this was a long-distance call. Gordon said, 'Yes, Irving, she's right. I like you, but don't talk about the weather when I'm phoning from Hollywood.' So I said, 'Max, I'll test you to see if you really like me. Over this long-distance phone count from 1 to 20—very slowly.' "

6 A. M.: ". . . And I'm glad we didn't go to Europe, dear . . . What? . . . Your birthday? . . . Well, it's better celebrating it here now. Over there you'd be getting a 100,000-gun salute."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 12.—You won't recognize Eleanor Powell in "Broadway Melody"—I didn't. Fred Astaire has done for Eleanor just what he did for Ginger Rogers. She's streamlined, not that she was ever fat, but she looks much smaller with Fred, her hair is off her neck in a very becoming soft roll around her face. I don't know what there is about Fred, but he brings out a quality which they didn't reveal before. This "Broadway Melody" isn't a musical, but a story with music which enhances the action. There are three numbers and Fred is part of them. Eleanor's so thrilled being with him. They're dancing in a set of midnight blue with stars twinkling through, before a 65-foot mirror set in frame of black bamboo, and a marquetry floor made of mirrors. Already, their heels have smashed ten—proving there isn't a superstition in a carload. The mirrored screen picks up every reflection in the room and was made by the man who designed the Palomar telescope, largest in the world. Oversized trees of frosted, white bugle beads. And here we're lucky if we get enough of those to make a turban.

HOPPER

Andy Devine is a problem child on "Man from Montreal." Andy weighs 270 pounds, has already worn out, or ruined, eight horses up at the Big Bear location where he's playing a Canadian Mountie. Director Cabanne phoned the studio: "If you can't find a horse that can handle this Devine job, send a couple of elephants."

Priceless remark of an extra on "Tower of London" set. After chatting with Basil Rathbone she startled him with: "If I'd held your hand ten years ago, I'd have a full house by now." P.S.—not if she's ever met his wife, Ouida.

Everyone here is puzzled as to why England permitted Madeleine Carroll to leave, but wouldn't let Vivian Lubitsch out, even though her husband is an American.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carlson are entertaining the man responsible for Dick's leaps ahead in writing and acting. He's Ora McLaughlin, teacher of journalism in the Albert Lee High School, Minneapolis.

Mad Hatter John Frederick tells me actresses mustn't wear a hat the color of their hair, and to look young, get one off the face. And by all means, stay away from heavy, leaning tower of Pisa affairs. Why, John, what will we do to hide our character lines?

An odd sight was Claire James, last year's "Miss California" doing a Civil War scene in "Swanee" while reading the headlines of this one.

One thing war is doing—we now know ages of all English stars, except Ronnie Coleman, who is as mysterious as ever!

On the twelfth, Bob Hope will be made Mayor of Treasure Island for a day. He's the only actor thus honored at both World's Fairs. He brought back a cute picture of four generations of Hopes—grandfather, 96; a nephew, 15; uncle he took over with him hadn't seen his father for 30 years. Bob left when he was 3.

Zanuck's just signed a Montana cowboy from the "It" cafe, named George Montgomery, who has "It".

They almost had a stampede at LaJolla Beach Club when they thought Myrna Loy had come to lunch. But it was Mrs. Huggins, of the Kansas City social set, and is she a beauty.

Did you know the studios carry clauses permitting them to drop contract players if war runs more than three months?

Geography Study Given Film Stars

Joel McCrea and Jeffrey Lynn, who are working together in "Career Man," find themselves with more than a daily study of "lines." Each day the two actors are led to large maps of the world and given an hour's study of geography.

The maps used by Director Lloyd Bacon in his lessons show Europe before and during the World War.

It is not for amusement that Director Bacon goes through the daily geography lesson, but to acquaint his actors with the story of "Career Man," which involves the intrigue of nations and the plottings of foreign espionage agents.

Lana Dances Alone

Rushes of Lana Turner's dance number with Lynn Hayes in "These Glamour Girls," are declared to show such promise that the actress will do two solo numbers in "Dancing Co-Ed," the first time she has danced alone on the screen.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 12.—(INS).—Jimmy Roosevelt is finding the battles between the studio heads too much of a job for him. After two weeks as head of the studio interrelations committee, he today presented his resignation to Joseph Schenck, president of the Motion Picture Producers Association, in a letter stating that he did not have the necessary experience or background to work out a code of ethics. That the studios need to meet on a common ground, Mr. Roosevelt admits, but he says it's a full time job and that he came out here primarily to work at the Goldwyn Studio and therefore cannot do justice to another job.

LOUELLA PARSONS

The Roosevelt suggestion is a strong centralized committee to decide studio problems, presided over by a salaried man, who would work in conjunction with the Hays office. The committee could decide on conflicting pictures, stars' engagements and other inside battles. He also suggests that the academy function on a different basis. I am wondering if Jimmy doesn't feel that it would require the wisdom of Solomon to make decisions when two studios put up a claim for the same idea.

Our readers have expressed such interest in Damon Runyon's familiar characters, Joe and Ethel Turp, that I thought you might like to know Metro has made the final selections. Starting Friday, "A Call on the President," will go before the cameras, with William Gargan as Joe and Ann Sothern as Ethel. Associated with Mr. and Mrs. Average Citizen of Brooklyn, as Runyon calls the Turps, will be Walter Brennan as the postman for whose sake they go to Washington. Don't you think Walter is a good choice? Edgar Selwyn, the producer, and Robert Sinclair, the director, have decided it would be foolish to try to find someone who looks like President Roosevelt, so a dignified man will be chosen as a symbol of the Chief Executive, rather than an actor made up to resemble F. D. R.

No doubt you've seen Katherine Hartley's name on fan magazine interviews with the stars—and you will soon be seeing it on a credit title as the author of "Memo to a Movie Producer." Though the title doesn't sound much like it, this is a yarn based on the "Exile Colony" in Mexico, where Germans, Jews, scientist, laborers and a medley of all types of refugees are awaiting admission into the United States. Miss Hartley got her information from her husband, Kurt Frings, who is one of the German exiles awaiting his quota number down there. Arthur Hornblow thought so much of her story he bought it for immediate production and, along with the check, Miss Hartley also rates a contract as a Para staff writer.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Lola Lane's car catapulted down hill and right in the front door of Helen Ferguson's office. 'Twas a loose brake; Ann Sheridan practicing her "ooomph" on Earl Carroll at luncheon. But she was well chaperoned by Carroll's favorite show girl, Beryl Wallace; Bob Ritchie at the La Maze with Kay Sutton just before he flew to New York with Howard Hughes. I still say he does get around a lot; Gale Page is suffering with a bad case of flu; Greta Garbo spent a day looking at lots in Brentwood. Wonder if the Swedish gal intends to build; Ona Brown is receiving the sympathy of her friends in the passing of her mother, to whom she was devoted; poor little Mary Casiday is no better and her friends are greatly worried.

Never let it be said that Joan Bennett hasn't a great sense of humor. She is wearing a black dress with a red heart broken in the middle as the sole decoration; David Niven escorting Irene Ware to the Goldwyn preview and later to supper. They were with Nigel Bruce and his daughter. Neither was in evening dress, probably because both have been very sad over the war; the pretty girl with Townsend Netcher was Bobbie Cooper; Brenda Marshall has painted six pictures of Katharine Cornell, her favorite actress, and now she is too shy to present them to her.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

Banker Praises A.I.B. Training For Juniors

Midyear Dinner of the Educational Group at Columbia Club

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Value of training offered junior bankers by the American Institute of Banking was described to local members of that organization last night at Columbia Country Club by Howard M. Michel of the First National Bank of Baltimore and associate councilman of the institute.

The meeting was the midyear dinner of the educational committee of Washington Chapter of the institute, and more than 100 members of the chapter and guests were in attendance. Edward M. Blaiklock, Washington Loan & Trust Co., chairman of the educational commitee, presided.

Mid-Atlantic Building

Money spent for residential building in the Middle Atlantic States so far this year has reached the level which was recorded during November, 1938, according to J. T. Little, district manager of Dodge Reports. Contracts awarded each of the eight months established substantial margins over the same months of last year. Significantly, great activity has taken place in the one-family field.

The Dodge Report summary reveals a current residential contract total of $124,795,000 for southern New Jersey, eastern Pensylvania, Delaware, Maryland, the District of Columbia and Virginia. This includes a margin of more than $42,000,000 over the eight months' total of last year, $82,085,000. In a grouping of all types of building and heavy engineering construction, Dodge Reports finds that the Middle Atlantic States have passed the $300,000,000-mark. The eight-months' level was $311,637,000.

D. C. Life Underwriters

District of Columbia Chapter, Chartered Life Underwriters, held its first monthly supper meeting since June at the Cosmos Club last night. In line with its practice of keeping abreast of subjects bearing in life insurance, William R. Williamson, actuarial consultant of the Social Security Board, discussed in detail the recent changes in the Social Security Act.

Edward M. Blaiklock of the Washington Loan & Trust Co. and Chairman of the Educational Committee, Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking.

Cotton Closings Irregular After Ups and Downs

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—Action of securities exercised a dominating influence on cotton futures today. Vacillating frequently, only small orders were sufficient to move prices either way.

Initial gains of 6 to 8 points later gave way to losses of as much or more, but trade buying and covering checked further declines and the market turned up to close 2 higher to 6 lower.

A strong Liverpool market gave local futures a good start. Trade price fixing and buying by Wall street and Liverpool accounts offset moderate hedge selling through leading spot interests.

When the stock market turned weak, cotton experienced a sharp setback as commission and wire-house liquidation, together with professional selling, appeared. Subsequent rallies in securities induced more active covering by local shorts who found little for sale. Belated short covering near the close gave the market its final irregular tone.

Futures Price Range	Open	High	Low	Net ch.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil ran a course of early selling today then rallied and futures finished at the day's best, 2 to 15 points up. Weakness in outside markets encouraged initial pressure.

Sales totaled 170 contracts. September, *7.10; October, *7.15; December, 7.36@7.37; January, *7.44, and March, 7.57.

*Bid.

Crude oil eased slightly with sales reported at 6 cents in Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

Railroads Recall Men to Cope With Rising Traffic

Pittsburgh, Sept. 12 (AP).—Approximately 1,800 furloughed workmen, some idle for months, were recalled today by three railroads in the Pittsburgh district as the result of increased shipments of ore, steel and coal.

The Pennsylvania Railroad put back to work 1,560 men at several points; the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad recalled 200 and the Pittsburgh & West Virginia returned 30 to jobs.

In addition, the district was expected to share in the recall of 800 workmen to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad's system.

In recalling the workmen, the Pennsylvania Railroad reopened its suburban Pitcairn steel car shops and expanded its forces in the No. 2 yards and supporting shops, giving a total of 700 jobs. Approximately 900 others were recalled to the Pennsylvania Railroad's central region shops at Youngwood, Derry, Erie, Conway and Mahonington, Pa., and Olean, N. Y.

Steel Workers Called Back

Chicago, Sept. 12 (AP).—An upsurge in the steel industry in the Chicago area sent more than a thousand men back to work during the past week. Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, a subsidiary of U. S. Steel, blew in two idle blast furnaces at its Gary plant and raised its local employment to more than 38,000.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube opened a new blooming mill at Indiana Harbor. Inland Steel also showed a slight increase in employment.

Steel production in the Chicago area leaped from 51 per cent of capacity to 67 during the past week, the largest gain since mid-1937, trade authorities said.

Grain Prices Soften Under ProfitTaking

Maximum Losses for The Day Were Wheat 3 Cents, Corn 2 Cents

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 12 (AP).—Grain prices slumped today with renewal of belated profit taking. Wheat lost almost 3 cents, corn 2 cents and other grains less amounts before rallying moderately.

Selling was not on a large scale, however, the market weakening more because of lack of buying power than pressure of sales. Grain men watched the action of securities and other commodities in determining their course. Relaxing of sugar quotas, which was interpreted as reflecting the Governments attitude toward too rapidly advancing commodity prices, had a bearish effect.

Increased ocean freight rates, checking export business, temporary withdrawals of the export subsidy and greatly increased margin requirements for grain trading were factors tending to curb pit operations.

Rallying from mid-session lows, wheat closed 1⅜-2⅜ lower than yesterday, December 82⅛-82¼, May 83½-83⅝. These levels were about 8 cents below the war-boom highs of last Thursday but still 14 cents above quotations prior to the start of European hostilities.

Corn closed 1¼-1⅜ down, December 55¼, May 58⅛-58; oats ⅝ lower to ¼ higher; rye ¾-1⅝ down and lard unchanged to 10 lower.

Bull Forces Win in First Major Test; Stocks Rally After Heavy Realizing Trading Volume Continues at High Level

New York, Sept. 12.—Efforts to apply controls to the runaway commodity markets were combined with profit-taking operations in securities today to produce another day of wildly churning prices. Stocks took the shock in their stride. In a short-lived liquidating drive, which reached its height just before noon, leading stocks, featured by the steels, lost 2 to 8 points of their recent gains, but when buying operations were resumed with vigor in the afternoon, favorites closed up 1 to 5 points. Blue-chip Norfolk & Western jumped 10½ points. It was the first major test of the new bull market which burst on Wall Street with the declaration of war. It was a test successfully met by the bullish forces.

The market averaged a gain of a half a point. Spectacular progress was made by railroad issues, which were virtually ignored in the early days of the war market when the public rushed to steels, coppers, aviation and other shares directly affected by hostilities. Roads started rehiring furloughed workers today as the quickened industrial pace started taxing their facilities.

Trading on the big board was again at a banner level, totaling 4,168,560 shares, or only about a half million shares below Monday's total. Bond volume was $21,981,600 par value of which the United States issues accounted for $7,285,600.

Treasury Bonds Resistant

This marked a sharp reduction as far as the listed trading was concerned and indicated some let-up in the pressure against the Government issues. United States securities continued to decline, but losses were modest in comparison with those of the early war days, when investors sold out such high grade issues and rushed into war stocks. Dealers described the day's market in Treasuries as the quietest since the European war became generalized. Long term Governments were permitted to fall by small fractions but a good inquiry developed for Treasury notes and discount bills. Little official buying was done today but it is estimated that Federal reserve acquisitions since the start of the month are now close to $500,000,000. This buying was necessary in the effort to cushion the break in the Government list. Whether all of these vast purchases will go into the open market portfolio of the Federal reserve remains to be seen when the banking statistics are published.

Moves by the Government and trade organizations to make available additional supplies of commodities brought a sobering influence to bear on the skyrocketing futures markets and many of them, notably sugar, closed substantially lower. Profit-taking sales took a toll in grain trading and buying power also was less noticeable. Wheat futures ended the session 1⅜ to 2⅜ cents a bushel lower. Cotton opened higher but demand tapered and the close was barely steady, at 2 points higher to 6 points lower.

Sugar Futures Break

Sugar futures broke the permissible limit of 25 points following the action of President Roosevelt in issuing an order lifting marketing quotas. Other moves designed to make additional supplies available and stem the soaring price increase included the request of the American rubber manufacturers to the International Rubber Regulation Committee to increase the commercial export quota for rubber for the fourth quarter and the lifting by the Texas Railroad Commission of the allowable crude oil production quota in the prolific east Texas field.

Coffee futures declined 12 to 15 points, Cocoa was off 10 to 15 points and rubber dropped 15 to 95 points. Commodity futures that continued to climb, and their advances for the day, included cottonseed oil, up 2 to 15 points; wool tops, up 29 to 36 points; raw hides, up 33 to 50 points; silk, up 14 to 15 cents; copper, up 3 to 6 points; zinc, up 26 points, and lead, up 5 to 10 points.

Profit Taking in Steel

The opening of today's stock market lacked some of the sensation that has characterized earlier days of the war trading. Prices were irregular and they milled around until 11.30 when a heavy reaction was touched off by profit taking in the steels. The ticker was late as the decline gathered headway but after an hour of heavy pressure the rails and utilities caught the eye of the bullish forces. They featured in the afternoon turnabout and by this time there is no question but the short interest in the volatile steel and other war babies had been increased. Late gains in United States steel and Chrysler particularly was said in the street to have been accomplished at the expense of the shorts.

In a market of this type there were obviously some wide swings between the day's lows and highs. Steel for instance, dropped to 75⅛ but then closed at 82½, up 4⅛ points and making a new high for the year. Chrysler swung between 84⅝ and 91¼, gaining 4⅞ points and also establishing a new 1939 top.

Norfolk & Western Up 10⅛

The jump of 10⅛ points in Norfolk & Western gave this relatively inactive coal road the distinction of showing the major point gain, but the greatest speculative fervor was noted in New York Central. It was the day's most active stock, a total of 113,700 shares changing hands at rising prices. Its gain was 1¾. Pennsylvania gained 1⅜.

Bank stocks, traded over-the-counter, continued the rise which they started late last week as the increased demand for commercial loans held out the promise of bigger interest earnings.

Aviation shares started zooming at the opening, but the group was allowed to rest later in the day. There was a temporary wave of selling of the sugars, based on the elimination of the sugar quotas. The rubbers had to take selling encouraged by the action of the rubber manufacturers and metals were under some pressure.

Higher prices for steel scrap at Pittsburgh reflected the sharp increase in steel operations in this country. Orders are still of the domestic variety, no war business being submitted to our plants by the belligerents.

Auto Industry Not Yet at Peak Sloan Declares

Prosperity Will Rise, He Says, With Normal Upward Income Trend

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 12.—Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman of the General Motors Corp., informed the stockholders today "there does not seem to be any justification for believing the automotive industry has reached the maximum of its growth."

"While its development cannot be expected to continue at the rapid rate that characterized the earlier years," he said, "there is every reason to believe that as soon as our national policies permit the resumption of a normal upward trend in the national income, the automotive industry will enjoy, and at an accelerated rate, a degree of that prosperity."

In a message accompanying payment of the 75-cent dividend declared last month by directors, Sloan noted automobile sales have fluctuated with national income, increasing "at an accelerated rate as the level of the national income rises."

He added: "Even since 1929—a period generally characterized by uncertain business conditions—the registration of passenger cars and trucks in the United States has increased more than 10 per cent, indicating the extent to which the motor car has become a permanent and essential part of the daily life of the community and the importance placed upon it as a means of individual and commercial transportation."

Engineering Awards Ten-Year Peak for August

New York, Sept. 12 (AP).—Heavy engineering construction awards for August totaled $311,222,000, the biggest volume for that month since 1929, Engineering News-Record reported today.

Weekly average awards for August were $62,244,000, a gain of 37 per cent over the weekly average for July and 7 per cent greater than the same month a year ago.

Private awards, on a weekly average basis, were the highest since April, 1938, and were 17 per cent above a month ago and 88 per cent higher than the same period last year. An increased volume of commercial and industrial buildings and unclassified construction were responsible for the large gains in private building activity.

Public construction was 23 per cent above last month but 13 per cent below a year ago.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 12.—Principal interest in the stock market again was confined to commodity shares and internationals today. Oils finished firm. Iron, steel and textile shares were higher. Copper issues reacted and rubbers closed under their best.

Amsterdam.—The bourse turned hesitant today under profit-taking. Tobacco shares were depressed. Some rubber stocks strengthened. American issues were still above overnight parities. Bonds for the most part were reactionary.

Paris.—Domestic issues in the bourse had a firm tone in continued restricted trading. International shares were rarely quoted. Ordinary rentes showed resistance. Cotton futures again were active and strong today. The American staple was in urgent demand. Trade calling and speculative buying was heavy and prices went to gains of 2 to 23 points at the close.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

The United Federal Workers' recent letter to the Attorney General on the high cost of living's effect on Government employes, raises a subject of extremely serious proportions. In times of rising prices, wages in private industry may, with some time lag, keep reasonable pace. No such thing happens to Federal employes' salaries, fixed by law.

All indications point to a period of increased prices if Government economists are to be believed. As a consequence, Federal workers are likely to feel the pinch.

One immediate result of such a situation, as Civil Service Commission experts are quick to point out, is that the top-heavy supply of applicants for every job is liable to be sharply curtailed. In times of depression, they explain, when wages in private industry are low, job-hunters flock to the Federal payroll. When private wages are high, Uncle Sam's trough is no longer so attractive.

Old timers in the commission cite the classic example of such a circumstance, which occurred in its most acute form during the World War. Recruiting officers, not for the Army or Navy, but for the civil service, actually stood on Washington street corners begging passers-by to take a Government job.

Results of that sort of recruiting are still clearly visible in the bi-monthly apportionment statistics of the commission. These figures, as of August 31 of this year, show 37 States and territories in arrears in apportionment, three States with quota filled, ten States slightly in excess. But two States, Maryland and Virginia, have from two to three times as many residents working for the Government in Washington as they are apportioned, and the District, with a quota of 196 position, has 3892 of its residents on the Federal payroll here.

The explanation, of course, lies in the fact that the people pressed into Government service during the war were largely Washingtonians or those who lived in nearby areas.

The award for an all-time high in conscientiousness goes to the Treasury Department, which recently sent the Comptroller General an eight-paragraph communication concerned with the weighty questions of whether employes of the Lighthouse Service, transferred to the Treasury's Coast Guard, would be required to take new oaths of office. A mass swearing-in ceremony seemed in the offing.

R. N. Elliott, acting comptroller general, mused for 18 days and five paragraphs over the question of whether new oaths were necessary.

He said, "No."

Open competitive examinations, for which applications must be filed before October 10 have been announced by the Civil Service Commission for the following positions:

Engineering draftsman, for work on ships, chief, principal, senior, full and assistant grades, from $1,620 to $2,600 annually;

Gallery designer, Maritime Commission, $3,800;

Air carrier inspector, radio, Civil Aeronautics Authority, $3,800;

Head scientist-astronomer, to be director of the Nautical Almanac at the Naval Observatory, $6,500. Applicants must have received a Ph.D. or equivalent degree, with major study in astronomy and mathematics;

Junior domestic attendant, seamstress, Bureau of Home Economics, $1,200.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Women champions put every bit as much into the tournaments as the men. An example of hard offensive and defensive play in the national women's pair championship is shown in today's box. Mrs. A. M. Sobel and Mrs. R. C. Young, two of the country's leading women players, who won the title for the second consecutive year, held the hand in the final round of the event. Mrs. Sobel was declarer and managed to overcome strong defense by developing an unusual end-play early in the proceedings.

West opened the king of diamonds and Mrs. Sobel refused to win, blocking the East hand from obtaining the lead with the jack. Had West continued with another diamond, declarer's problem would have been greatly simplified. She could win the ace, cash the ace and king of trumps and then play the heart king.

After taking the ace, West would be forced to lead another heart or a diamond, either of which would put the lead in dummy, so that the vital club finesse could be established.

But shrewd West would not be so trapped: she decided upon the fine switch of the ace of hearts. With the king falling, she then led another diamond, complicating Mrs. Sobel's play.

The young woman champion was equal to the occasion. Winning the diamond with the ace, she cashed the king of spades and then led a low spade to dummy's ten. West's queen held the trick, and West was in the very position she had tried to avoid. She had to lead either a diamond, which Mrs. Sobel could ruff with dummy's last trump then to take the club finesse, or a heart, which North could win with the queen.

Mrs. Sobel made four spades, losing a heart, a diamond and a spade, for a fine score.

West might have gone one step further and defeated Mrs. Sobel had she made the spectacular discard of the queen of spades on the lead of the king. This would have kept West out of the lead and prevented the end-play. Declarer would have to lose a club as well as the other three tricks.

NUTS AND JOLTS

ADRIANA

By George Dyer

A Story of Love and Intrigue in Vineyard Sound

Chapter 32

I STAYED there for a long time, while the fog and darkness swept past and over me, damp, cold, endless, and somehow terribly tragic.

DYER

Maybe that isn't the word, but it expresses the way I felt. There were no lights anywhere, except when early in the run we slid by quite close to the blinker at the end of Devils Bridge, and I judged Capt. Matt was taking his departure for the long leg westward to Point Judith. Then for an eternity there was nothing more to see, and nothing to hear beyond faraway fog horns, the unhappiest sound in the world.

I thought over and over again every moment I had spent in the company of Adrianna Blake, and the more I thought, the more sharp and beautiful each of those moments seemed. There was a sadness about them, too, as if they were something precious and lost forever. I seemed to remember them all as though they had taken place just before sunset, in that clear golden level light which is the day's last sally against the conquering night.

There is no telling how long I spent in this mournful reflection before I became aware of a noise like an enormous hive of bees out in the darkness anywhere ahead. The remote buzzing was faint at first, but growing steadily louder, and sounding like an airplane engine.

I shook myself, and made my way aft, Sig., the older and more authoritative of Capt. Matt's boys, was at the wheel. The old fisherman was outside the square clumsy pilothouse gazing doubtfully into the smoldering mist. As I stepped down into the waist of the boat, he told Arne to slow down his motor. The boy did so with an air of unhurried competence. We could then hear the distant noise plainly.

It had the quality of a multi-engined airplane, or of a fleet of 'planes, or of a dirigible—deep and even, not fluctuating and staccato like the sound of a single 'plane or boat. There was on doubt about what craft was approaching. Presently the noise penetrated to Bronson, and he came on deck to join us.

"Where are we?" he asked Capt. Matt.

"Pretty near to Brown's Ledge. Dat's sout'west of Cuttyhunk. Dat's Vineyart Sount Lightship you hear off dere astern."

"Browns Ledge," murmured Bronson. "B. L. But it certainly looked like B. I.—Here! that stinkpot out there seems to be heading straight for us."

The blurred thunder of the speedboat's exhausts was now growing immense—and terrifying. I couldn't help thinking what would be left of the Freda K., the speedboat, and of all of us, if it struck us when it was going fast enough to roar like that.

"I t'ink she's going to pass us to port," Capt. Matt said. He had to raise his voice almost to a shout to make himself heard.

At this moment, when it was almost upon us, the huge roar suddenly died away.

"He's throttling down," said Bronson, "I wonder if those letters could have been B. L.? But what would our friend want to do here?"

HARD AS it was to tell exact directions in the fog, it was nevertheless easy to guess that the idling powerplant we could still hear muttering through the darkness was off our port bow, and not so far away.

"Cut your engine altogether," ordered Bronson, taking command of the situation. Sig. leaned forward and opened a switch. The Freda K.'s motor, which was now puffing more loudly than the speedboat's, was silenced.

"Put your helm down," said the former naval officer. "Hold it hard over as long as we have steerage way. We'll see if we can slide up on them quietly. Douse those running lights and the cabin lights."

This is the last coherent remark I can recall from any one before my share in the cruise of the Freda K. ended abruptly and remarkably.

Things began to happen so fast and unexpectedly, and in such confusion, that it is hard to straighten out precisely the sequence of events. But since the next 60 seconds contained what was probably the most critical moment of my life, it is worth trying to be exact.

Briefly, and in the bald language of the courts that have to examine such occurrences, the Freda K. "was in collision" with Thornton C. Rassin's experimental torpedo speedboat called by him Mark X. Both boats were coasting at the instant of contact, and did negligible structural damage to each other. But what was most important, and what I didn't expect, and what therefore so literally caught me off balance, was that they struck each other twice.

It happened this way:

The Freda K. had been steering west-by-north, magnetic, on her course from the end of the Devils Bridge for Point Judith. Sig. spun the wheel, and she slid slowly around in a quarter-circle until she was pointing about south-by-east. The speedboat (which proved to be much nearer than we all judged) was coasting ahead, still at a pretty good clip, on a course about south-east-by-east.

I had gone to the foredeck, with some vague notion of haling the other craft if it came in sight and demanding that Mr. Raskin stand and deliver, when I realized that the speedboat was coming up close behind us on the starboard side. I scrambled aft, on what impulse I cannot say now (unless it was to be by so much closer to Adriana Blake), and was next to the starboard rail, well abaft the beam, when the dim cabin windows of the other craft suddenly appeared out of the blackness. They were right in front of me, at about a level with my face, and going in the same direction as we but much faster. They looked near enough to touch. It was the speedboat's port side, but no red light was showing. She showed no range lights, either.

WE OF COURSE, were completely darkened and silent, and the man at the wheel of the other vessel could have known nothing of our presence until he struck us. I could see the heads of two men, but no sign of a girl, inside the cabin. Then the windows had slipped forward beyond my vision and the port bow of the speedboat was striking a heavy but glancing blow against the starboard bow of the Freda K.

I have since learned that a double contact nearly always happens in a bow-to-bow collision of this description, but I was caught completely unprepared when the bows sprang apart, and the two vessels struck each other a second time. This was as the port counter of the speedboat smashed into the starboard rail of the Freda K. at a point just under my feet.

The rail was no higher than my shins, and there was nothing within reach to grab. Before I had the slightest idea that anything was wrong with me personally I was being hurled through the air. And before I realized I was in violent motion the motion was over and I had landed, sprawled face down, on a wet iron grating.

Over my head a searchlight blazed, and a voice cried: "What the hell was that?" Another answered: "A fisherman." The first one shouted, with some unreasonableness: "Why don't you show your lights, damn you?" Under my belly I heard a bell ring and felt a mounting vibration. The roar of the speedboat's exhausts swelled to the volume we had heard as she approached us. But unaccountably, instead of fading off into the distance, the thunder grew and grew.

All I could think of was to cling to the slippery grating under me. I had no sense yet of what had happened or where I was. But over my right shoulder I saw the beam of the searchlight playing on the water, and noticed a broadbeamed fishingboat poised in the middle of the brilliant circle of light. Before the beam shut off, I could make out that the fishingboat was already at some distance, and rapidly falling away. The light was so bright that I could see two men standing by the rail in attitudes of astonishment. One had a white beard. Beside him was a great grey dog, also astonished.

Then darkness fell utterly and I was left clinging to my trembling handhold, without being able to see a single detail of the object that supported me.

But I knew now that it was no part of the Freda K. Volleys of spray began to strike on my bare head and shoulders. I didn't dare move because I felt as if I were hanging by my eyelashes over a bottomless pit, and in such complete blackness any move might be wrong. I couldn't even tell whether my head was higher than my feet or the reverse.

Three fingers of my right hand and two of my left were twined desperately into the holes of some sort of grating. I gradually found holes for the rest of them. The grating seemed to end in a hard line just above my knees. My left foot from time to time dragged through water. My arms must have been under a terrific strain, because they began to ache almost at once, and the iron bit into the inside of my hands from the first. A sort of numbness in my right wrist suggested that it had been sprained when I landed, and shortly would begin to hurt like the devil.

I could not have held on very long, but fortunately I didn't have to. The vibration under me (which at its height fairly shook me bone from bone) stopped. The strain on my arms became less. The spray no longer pelted my face.

About 20 feet from my head, and a little to the left, I saw a glimmer of light. It came from the opening of a hatch. A man climbed out behind a flashlight, walked around what I recognized as the low cabin of the speedboat I had seen issue from the Sea Reduction Corporation's plant, and went away from me. A voice hailed back through the darkness: "No danger for'ard."

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Coast Guard Gets Ready to Block Arms

Personnel Expected To Be Increased by 4,500 Men to 14,000

As officials yesterday awaited a Presidential order increasing Coast Guard man-power to an all-time high of 14,000, construction crews continued work on a highly efficient, quarter-of-a-million-dollar radio station that will play a key role in the struggle against shipment of contraband to warring nations in Europe.

The preparations anticipate even greater activity by coast patrols than was forced by smuggling in the hey-day of rum-running.

In 1924, 1925 and 1926, when scores of liquor-bearing vessels hovered in American waters seeking opportunities to drop their illicit cargoes, only 12,250 men were in active Coast Guard service.

Personnel Down to 9,500

In the years following, the Coast Guard complement was gradually reduced to its present strength of 9,500 men. The Presidential order is expected to add 4,500 more men through a call for volunteers. The emergency created by the war in Europe has already resulted in the shifting of Pacific cruisers to Atlantic waters.

While the normal work of the Coast Guard includes the prevention of smuggling, the enactment of the neutrality act added the function of erecting a patrol barrier against the shipment of "arms and implements of war" to belligerents.

The first effort of the Coast Guard to put this phase of its work into action came when the President recognized the existence of hostilities in Spain. Officials said the "blockade" of arms shipments in the Spanish conflict was completely effective.

Radio Speeds Operations

Construction of the new central radio station on Telegraph road, 5 miles south of Alexandria in Fairfax County, will permit constant contact between Coast Guard Headquarters in Washington and hundreds of radio-bearing craft at sea. The present station at Fort Hunt, Va., will be dismantled.

Immediate communication in emergencies will also be possible with the 50 Coast Guard planes that regularly patrol the borders and coasts.

So far, no airplane detachments have been detailed to the Canadian border, but the general increase of Coast Guard manpower envisages greater activity by Great Lakes patrols. In this area, Coast Guard vessels co-operate with Treasury Department customs authorities, who will bear the greatest burden in preventing arms shipments to Canada.

Columbia Alumni To Hear Ackerman

Carl W. Ackerman, dean of the Graduate School of Journalism at Columbia University, will be principal speaker at an informal meeting of the Columbia University Alumni Club of Washington at 7 p. m. tomorrow at the National Press Club. The program will begin with a buffet supper to which alumni and friends are invited.

Civil Service To Start Junior Aides List Soon

First Register to Be Established Today Or Tomorrow

Today or tomorrow the Civil Service Commission will establish its first register of junior professional assistants, comprised mainly of young college graduates who were examined last spring in 22 specialized categories. Several hundred District residents and students at local universities took the examination.

The register was devised to give college graduates a stepping-stone into the Federal career service at a beginning salary of $2,000 a year. On establishment of the register, Government agencies under civil service regulations may apply for lists of the young men and women to fill vacancies.

Of 34,740 persons who took the examination, only 7,539 passed. In 200 examination papers, picked at random from those of the successful applicants, 83 colleges and universities were listed as the institutions from which the candidates graduated.

The general title of junior professional assistant is broken down into the following specialized positions:

Gas Company Challenges U. S. Right to Fix Rate

The Cities Service Gas Company yesterday challenged the authority of the Federal Power Commission to assume jurisdiction over the production of natural gas and to fix the rates to be charged.

The commission had ordered the company to show cause why it should not adopt a weighted average rate of 30 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for gas users in 39 Missouri and 40 Kansas delivery points.

The company declared it is not a common carrier but sells its own gas through its own pipe lines to selected customers. It declared its rate of return was not excessive in view of its investment and charged that the commission had overlooked several production costs.
